TEHRAN (UPI) — Emboldened by chants of "don't let them go" from thousands of young Iranians, Islamic militants today refused to turn over the 50 American hostages to Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh.

Calling Ghotbzadeh's assertion that Ayatollah Khomeini authorized him to take custody of the hostages a "tissue of lies," the militants said they would not abide by their own deadline — 5 p.m. local time — for handing over the captives until the Revolutionary Council named someone else for the task.

The council was to meet this evening to decide who is to take custody of hostages from the students.

Ghotbzadeh, in an apparent attempt to salvage credibility, said in a Tehran Radio broadcast: "Responsibility for taking delivery of the hostages has been entrusted to me, and in order to carry out the decision of the Revolutionary Council and to solve the present crisis, I shall go to the den of espionage."

He said that turning over the hostages to the council "is under no circumstances aimed at their release." He said Khomeini had entrusted that task to Iran's yet-to-be-elected parliament.

Chanting "don't let them go," some 4,000 Iranian demonstrators massed in front of the embassy's heavily chained iron gates to form a human wall to prevent Ghotbzadeh from entering the compound.

"So far the Ayatollah Khomeini has not given us a direct order to let the American spies go," a militant at the embassy said.

In their own statement to Tehran radio, the militants said:

"According to information which has reached us, the published report quoting Ghotbzadeh pertaining to the Imam's command on the handing over of the hostages is a tissue of lies.

"We regret that we cannot hand over the hostages to the foreign minister. It is essential, therefore, for the Revolutionary Council to officially appoint another representative to take delivery of the hostages," the statement added.

Ghotbzadeh said Friday the captives would be moved to a secret location in Tehran for questioning by a UN panel investigating the regime of the deposed shah.

Tehran Radio announced that Khomeini had turned over the entire issue of the hostages — not just the custody matter — to the foreign ministry.

The students said they will not leave the U.S. Embassy complex because "they have more revelations to make" from documents they have found in the embassy.

Meanwhile, saboteurs have blown up three more oil pipelines in southwestern Iran, bringing the number of pipes exploded since Wednesday to nine, the official Pars news agency reported today.

Quoting oil company sources in the oil-producing Khuzestan province, the agency said a 45-centimetre pipe carrying oil from Ahwaz to Abadan caught fire Friday after a bomb explosion. The fire was later brought under control.

Pars said a 50-cm and a 30-cm pipe north of Ahwaz were blown up Friday night, starting a fire which so far was not under control.

Some MDs refusing to stamp 'pain in the neck' sick forms

By MIKE HUGHES

B.C. doctors are no longer going to rubber-stamp sickness certificates for employees or school children.

The doctors have adopted a new policy which states they will not sign certificates of disability unless they have been dealing with a patient for five days or know for a fact the person has been ill for that length of time.

In the past employees or parents have asked doctors to sign sick slips stating they or their children had been sick for a period of time. The doctors were signing the slips even though they had not been consulted in the case nor did they know for a fact the person had been sick for that period.

Some doctors are following the new regulation but others have dismissed it as being unworkable.

The B.C. Federation of Labor is concerned that the five-day regulation will cause serious problems.

Language in many union contracts gives the employer the right to request a doctor's certificate when an employee is off sick.

But many workers have not been consulting a doctor as soon as they get the flu or some minor illness which initially doesn't seem that serious.

Dr. Mel Petreman, president of the B.C. Medical Association, said in an interview Friday the new policy was adopted because doctors were being inundated with requests for illness certificates.

"Physicians were more and more ending up to be monitors for employers asking for certificates from their employees," he said.

The problem is, Petreman explained, often times a doctor is asked for a certificate without really knowing whether the person has been sick or not.

"He has to take the patient's word for it."

The new policy of demanding that the doctor be involved in the case for a period of five days stems from a study on absenteeism by the Canadian Medical Association.

The national doctors' body recommended the new policy to the provincial groups. The B.C. Medical Association approved it at a Jan. 12 meeting.

The exact wording of the new policy:

Space visitors miss their cue

RIO DE JANIERO (AP) — About 50,000 Brazilians hoping for a close encounter with a space ship from Jupiter jammed onto a farm near Rio today, only to have their expectations dashed when the predicted dawn arrival time came and went without a sign of Jovian visitors.

Word of the forthcoming "visit" had been hot news in this nation of 120 million since last weekend when a Brazilian farmer told a national television audience he had learned by "telepathy" that the space ship from Jupiter would be landing on his farm today at 5:20 a.m.

Interviewed earlier on one of Brazil's most popular TV talks shows, the farmer said the people from Jupiter were coming to return a Brazilian helicopter pilot snatched in 1976. Indeed, a chopper pilot disappeared mysteriously on a flight off Brazil's Atlantic coast in that year.

Edilicio Barbosa, the farmer and long-time UFO aficionado, was no where to be seen today.

Boys try bank job

Two boys aged 12 and 15 are in the Duncan RCMP lockup charged with attempting to rob a bank Friday morning.

A police spokesman said the pair entered the Bank of Montreal on Canada Way at 10:35 a.m. and handed Debbie Sherwood, a clerk in the loan department, a note which read: 'I got a gun. Act normal or I'll shoot. Give me all the money.'

The spokesman said Sherwood was so dumbfounded she hesitated, and the would-be robbers panicked and fled.

Police searched the area and found the suspects in a pool hall about half a block from the bank.

The boys have been remanded in custody.

Former prosecutors deny Vogel interfered

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two lawyers who acted as Crown counsel in the court case of a Kootenay lawyer said Friday that deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel did not attempt to influence them.

Brian Nattrass, one of the lawyers, described the allegation as ludicrous and said a CBC reporter disregarded his denial of the charge.

Nattrass and Robert Moffat were commenting on allegations in a CBC report that Vogel "influenced or tried to influence the course of justice" in the case of lawyer Mickey Moran, charged with impaired driving at Christina Lake near Grand Forks.

In the Moran case, the CBC said Vogel called a local prosecutor and suggested that a charge of dangerous driving be added to charges if impaired driving and refusing a breath test.

The report said the prosecution then dropped the first two charges and Moran pleaded guilty to dangerous driving. He was given an absolute discharge as a result of the March 14, 1978, accident.

Nattrass, now in private practice here, said he was employed in the Crown counsel's office in Nelson when the Moran case began.

"My function was to look at the RCMP circumstance sheet and then at the charges laid to make sure the right charges had been laid, that the facts were there to support the charges," he said.

"I looked at the circumstance sheet on the Moran case and saw that two charges had been laid — impaired and refusing the breathalyser test. Mickey was very well known in the area as a criminal lawyer. I wanted to be sure that the Is were dotted and the Ts were crossed. Because of the circumstances on the sheet I felt that the facts would support a charge of dangerous driving."

Nattrass said he contacted the regional Crown counsel in Kelowna and received approval to lay the additional charge.

"At no time did I have any input from Vogel or anyone in his office. It is patently untrue to suggest that anything like that happened."

Nattrass said CBC reporter Chris Bird contacted him three weeks ago and showed him his script which said Vogel phoned a local prosecutor and suggested the addition of a dangerous driving charge.

"The reporter asked me if this was true and I said no. I said to him 'you're going to be in trouble if you put this in because it isn't true.' The CBC is trying to create something that is non-existent."

Moffat, now in the Crown counsel's office in Vernon, said in an interview Friday that he was Crown counsel during the Moran case.

He said he stayed charges of impaired driving and refusing a breath test against Moran because of insufficient evidence.

"We did proceed with the dangerous driving charge and there was a guilty plea. I had no contact with Vogel."

How high can interest rates go?

By
JENNIFER LEWINGTON

OTTAWA (CP) — How high can interest rates go? Over the last year, as rates climbed beyond forecasts, borrowers and depositers have had good reason to wonder.

Mortgage rates are currently 14.5 per cent, making the monthly interest charge $605 on a $50,000 house for a 25-year period. A year ago the cost was $482.

The monthly cost today of a $5,000 car loan at 16 per cent interest, repaid over three years, is $176. A year ago, at 13 per cent, the cost was $169.

Today, a one-year term deposit of $5,000 earns 12 per cent for a yearly interest payment of $600. Last July a depositer earned 8.75 per cent for a return of $437.50.

All those figures will move up if the Bank of Canada, as some predict, soon raises the bank rate — the key to interest charges in the economy — from the present record high level of 14 per cent.

For the last three weeks, the bank has resisted, despite rate increases in the U.S. which have pushed interest rate levels there well ahead of those in this country. The private rate in Canada is 15 per cent compared to 17.25 per cent in the U.S.

Normally, that would cause an outflow of money from Canada, thereby lowering the value of the dollar and forcing the bank to raise interest rates and attract money back in.

But an unexpectedly strong inflow of capital — lured by prospects of major oil discoveries off the East Coast — has rushed to invest in oil and gas companies on the Canadian stock market, pushing the value of the dollar beyond the mid-87-cent U.S. level.

But, the dollar began to tumble in the last few days to the low 86-cent level, an indication the bank may have to defend the dollar and attract foreign capital by raising interest rates.

The Toronto stock market continued to plummet Friday as investors worried about rising interest rates cashed in their stocks.

The TSE 300 index sank 50.81 points to 2045.71, just a day after plunging 69.31 points, its worst daily drop on record. The declines erased gains made during the last three weeks, pushing the index roughly to the level it was at Feb. 15.

Efforts to predict what will happen to rates have proved unrewarding for the last year as economists and others guessed incorrectly.

But economists agree on one thing: There is no set limit to how high rates can go. It depends on what happens to the rate of inflation.

If inflation goes up, so do interest rates — as recent U.S. moves show. Usually, interest rates are higher than the rate of price increase so that lenders and those depositing their money still make profits after inflation is removed.

Doug Peters, chief economist for the Toronto-Dominion Bank, points out "15-per-cent to 16-per-cent interest rates look phenomenally high, but if the goods you're buying are increasing by 10 per cent, then you may be better off to buy now."

He notes that by removing the effects of inflation from current mortgage rates of 14.75 per cent, the borrower has a rate of 4.75 per cent. While that may be true in theory, Peters says homeowners, of course, still have to pay the 14.75-per-cent rate.

He believes there will be a prolonged period of high interest rates this year as inflation rises close to 10 per cent in the wake of higher energy costs.

Continued high interest rates and rising inflation will be among the major headaches for the new Liberal Finance Minister, Allan MacEachen, who is not making predictions about either issue.

But he says "the best way of bringing about lower interest rates is to reduce generally inflationary pressures. Part of that in the U.S. is beyond our control but we have to do our best."

For the moment, the momentum is building to higher interest rates in Canada, especially amid growing signs that the foreign capital which had propped up the dollar through stock market investments is flowing out of the country.

"There's a limit to how long we can hold off," says Peter Martin, economist for McLeod, Young, Weir Ltd. of Toronto. In an environment of widening interest rate spreads between Canada and the U.S. as well as a declining dollar, he predicts a strong possibility of higher interest rates.

Police union gloomy

Great Victoria police union officials aren't optimistic about the outcome of joint negotiations for new labor contracts which begin next Wednesday.

Sgt. Bill Bailey, president of the Victoria police union, said today he fears a greater likelihood of confrontation now that area police boards have turned over bargaining duties to the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association.

He said that because of considerable differences that exist among the four municipal police contracts the GVLRA faces an almost impossible task of trying to come up with a single package satisfactory to all unions.

He said the decision of the boards to bargain collectively will result in an erosion of the control each of the boards has over police budgets, a loss that could have a far-reaching impact on the delivery of police services.

Meanwhile, the unions have formed a joint council for police negotiations to represent the members' interests at the bargaining table.

Bailey said the collective approach hasn't worked for school boards and predicted the same outcome in this case.

"I think the police boards have acted in haste without proper consultation," he said.

"That a physician only complete a certificate of disability if he has been in attendance upon that patient and that patient has been ill for a period of at least five full days or if he has satisfactory knowledge of such illness for five days and it is so stated on the form."

Petreman, a Nanaimo physician, said the doctors felt the previous situation was a waste of time both for the employees and themselves.

"It was time to call a halt. It was a nuisance factor and a nuisance factor we could do without."

But as far as unions are concerned the new policy could result in a bigger pain in the neck for the doctors.

Keith Graham, head of the B.C. Federation of Labor's occupational health committee, said the only response unions can have is to recommend to their members that for every minor ailment they "plug the doctor's office."

The first day that an employee is off sick he will consult his doctor just in case he is asked for a sick slip, Graham explained.

He said the federation agrees doctors shouldn't be signing forms they aren't sure are true.

But on the other hand, he added, surely a doctor by checking a patient's medical history and knowing him or her personally can be satisfied as to the veracity of a statement on how long they have been sick.

He said the federation wrote to Petreman Jan. 30 explaining the federation's position and requesting a meeting. There has been no reply to the letter.

The matter was raised at a meeting last week of the Victoria Labor Council and tabled because delegates didn't feel they knew enough about it.

Roger Lewis, president of the Victoria local of the International Woodworkers of America, said the new policy will no doubt create a lot of problems with his members.

"I don't know what they are trying to do," he said.

Petreman said the medical association will issue a statement soon explaining the doctors' position.

"We don't want to create any hard feeling. We are simply correcting a situation we feel is inappropriate."

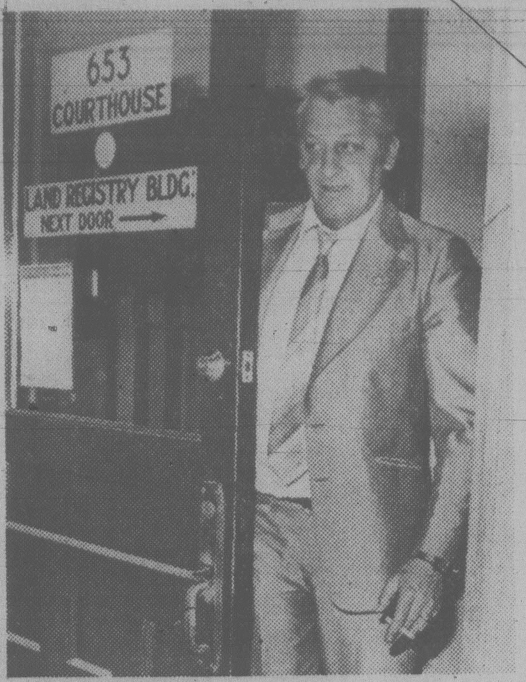
McKitka guilty of kickbacks



McKitka leaves court after convictions

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Controversial former mayor Ed McKitka showed no emotion when he was convicted Friday of demanding kickbacks and abusing the trust of his office in 1977.

McKitka, who will be sentenced next Friday, remained silent as he left the courtroom but his lawyer said the conviction will be appealed.

The flamboyant politician had survived two inquiries into similar allegations while he was mayor of Surrey.

The B.C. Supreme Court jury found him guilty of seven of nine criminal charges against him relating to his disclosure of confidential zoning information to developers and then demanding benefits from them.

McKitka, 45, now a Surrey alderman, was convicted of four counts of breach of trust, two counts of unlawfully demanding a benefit, and one count of threatening a Surrey alderman. The jury did not return a verdict on a related breach of trust charge after Mr. Justice George Murray told them that one of the charges could be considered redundant if they returned a guilty verdict.

He was found not guilty on one count of unlawfully demanding $100,000 from Ray Loewen, a former Social Credit member of the legislature.

In B.C., politicians sentenced on criminal charges are automatically removed from office and barred from running for office again for five years.

Loewen testified that McKitka demanded a $100,000 bribe for helping him to obtain a land-use contract for a multi-million-dollar commercial development.

McKitka denied the allegation and called Loewen a liar.

The other charges said that McKitka:

— Breached the trust of his office by misleading a local farmer about the value of his land and by trying to obtain the property for himself;

— Breached trust by favoring a development project in which developer Walter Link had an interest;

— Disclosed confidential information to Link about a proposed road extension;

— Breached trust by his conduct in relation to property in a proposed Surrey town core;

— Disclosed to Link the location of the proposed town core;

— Demanded a benefit from developer Joe Beck for helping to pass a council resolution relating to a land use contract for a large commercial development;

— Unlawfully demanded a benefit from Link as consideration for helping to pass a council resolution relating to the future extension of a road in the municipality;

Building trades ask $3.50 hike

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council is seeking an increase of $3.50 an hour in a total package presented Friday to Construction Labor Relations Association.

A spokesman for the council, representing 45,000 workers in 17 international unions, said his group wants a two-year agreement, provided CLRA agrees to a cost of living clause and a wage increase during the second year.

Ron Gautier, chairman of the union bargaining council, said if CLRA won't accept the terms, the council will seek a one-year agreement.

Gautier said workers have had their purchasing power eroded by inflation and the council is looking for a substantial catch-up increase this year.

CLRA negotiates for about 825 contractors who handle about 80 per cent of construction work in B.C.

Oil shipping probe urged

Every aspect of the shipment of oil along B.C.'s west coast should be investigated, Senator Ray Perrault said Friday.

Perrault, government leader in the Senate, said the oil ports inquiry held by University of B.C. professor Andrew Thompson provided much environmental knowledge.

But Perrault said all the environmental and ecological studies should be compiled with political and economic studies to develop a strong case for the Foothills Pipe Line overland route.

"In view of the re-emerging urgency of the problem, I think that we have to step up our offensive," he said. "There will be hearings in the United States with respect to this matter. I'd like to see strong Canadian advocacy there based on a report of that kind."

Perrault met Premier Bill Bennett to discuss matters of mutual concern, including how B.C., which did not elect any Liberal MPs in the Feb. 18 federal election, can be better represented in Ottawa.

The senator also said the Liberals will make a statement within the week on funding for Trident Aircraft Ltd. of Sidney which recently laid off its 100-man workforce after the previous Conservative government rejected further financial aid to the aircraft firm.

BCRIC criticism dismissed

VANCOUVER (UPC) — B.C. Resources Investment Corp. President David Helliwell said he was disappointed BCRIC share prices were dropping while the holding company decides whether to exercise its option for purchase of 24 percent interest in Kaiser Resources Ltd. for $160 million.

Helliwell dismissed criticism from the investment community that the acquisitions would make BCRIC a giant holding company instead of a robust operating company.

He blamed the investment community for fueling investors' fears. The stock closed Friday at $7.45, down $1.55 since Tuesday when BCRIC acquired a 14.1 percent interest in MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. and an option to buy a 24 percent interest in Kaiser.

"People don't realize we haven't bought Kaiser yet," Helliwell said. "We've only got an option on it and 45 days to make sure we really want it.

Union slams mill closing

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Paperworkers Union slammed the provincial government Friday for its handling of the closure of the Ocean Falls pulp mill.

The union, which represents the 410 mill workers, said in a statement it was shocked at the closure announced Thursday and that current employees should have priority for the 100 new jobs created when the mill is converted into a sawmill and wood chip operation.

The CPU complained that the government had not consulted the union at all before making the announcement.

The union said the issue of new jobs must be resolved immediately so employees can make decisions about their future.

"Surely the employees of a government-owned corporation could expect better treatment than was dished out yesterday," it said.

"The CPU views the actions of government in the handling of the entire Ocean Falls issue to be nothing short of disgraceful."

CPU representative Brian Payne said in an interview that union officials met with Premier Bill Bennett Jan. 16 and were told that a decision would be made regarding Ocean Falls in two months, and that the premier would visit the town in April.

Ray Williston, chairman of B.C. Cellulose Corp., which operates the mill, blamed the closure on losses which now total $20 million.

Ray Skelly (NDP — Comox-Powell River) said the closure will deal a death blow to the community.

Skelly said the people of Ocean Falls had learned about the turn of events from newspapers Thursday morning.

"This was an extremely callous thing to do," he said. "He (Bennett) had given assurance that there would be no move on Ocean Falls without consultation with the people."

Public inquiry needed

Richard Vogel did the only thing he could yesterday. He stepped down from his position as deputy attorney-general until an investigation into his conduct has been completed.

The person who may have to do much more than he has so far done is Attorney-General Allan Williams.

In light of the serious allegations made against Vogel in a CBC investigation, Williams has done two major things: he named the head of the court services division the acting deputy attorney-general, and he undertook to make a thorough personal investigation into the allegations.

Neither of these steps is enough to inspire confidence that the matter will be cleared up properly.

The first step Williams took was the appointment of the head of the court services division as the acting deputy minister. The inappropriateness of this decision has nothing to do with the individual in question who is a long-time, highly respected public servant. It has to do, rather, with the inappropriateness of appointing someone from that specific division to head the entire department.

In his report on judicial independence made public last week, Mr. Justice Peter Seaton wrote at length about the need for a more independent court services division. Court services is really a part of the judicial branch of government, not the executive, he said, and to tie it too closely to the other parts of the attorney-general's department is to risk an erosion of judicial independence. It is hard to think of a way of tying it more closely to the rest of the ministry than to have its head also acting as deputy minister.

The second step Williams has taken is to promise that he will undertake immediately a thorough review of the allegations made. He will, he told the legislature take further action if it appears to be warranted after he has finished his review.

That simply isn't good enough. Williams, a man with a high reputation for personal integrity, may conduct a perfectly unbiased inquiry into his deputy's conduct, but he will never be able to convince the public of his impartiality. No matter what the results of Williams' review, justice would not be seen to be done. And there is nowhere that maxim is more important than in the attorney-general's ministry.

The need for an obviously independent and public inquiry is even greater because of lingering public suspicions about the handling by the ministry of the Bill Ritchie affair and the RCMP report on "dirty tricks."

If the public needs an independent inquiry to reassure it that justice remains sacrosanct in B.C., no less does Vogel himself need one. Ritchie's continuing place in the government backbenches bears mute testimony to the damage that can be done to a public official when he is not allowed to defend himself in public from accusations made against him.

The allegations made against Vogel now are more serious than the ones that prompted the Seaton inquiry in 1979. Williams should ask cabinet immediately to appoint a federally-appointed justice of Seaton's calibre to begin a similar public inquiry into these matters.

Until he has done that, he has not met his obligations to his staff or to the public in working to clear up this most troubling affair.

Nature's nuclear reactors

By R. M. PEARCE

Two billion years ago a nuclear chain reaction started in a uranium-rich vein of ore in West Africa. It can now be revealed that this unlicensed reactor ran for 200,000 years with neither protective covering on the fuel nor containment building and that no environmental impact statement was submitted.

Twentieth century nuclear engineers well know that a nuclear chain reaction cannot sustain itself in ordinary water and uranium as it naturally occurs; in natural uranium there is only a small amount of the useful component U235 and too much of the non-useable component U238.

Possible in theory

However, in geological time, natural uranium has not always had this shortcoming: U235 was relatively more abundant during the early history of the earth because its disappearance rate (through radioactive decay) happens to be more than six times faster than that of U238. Thus we can categorically state that a chain reaction in natural uranium and ordinary water could have been sustained two billion years ago, in Precambrian times.

Although in retrospect this seems clear, the announcement by the French Commissariat a l'Energie Atomique (CEA) in 1972 that the fossil remains of a natural reactor had been discovered at Oklo in what is now the Gabon Republic in West Africa was greeted with some skepticism.

Perhaps there was some reluctance to admit that modern man's technological prowess in nuclear engineering had been pre-empted by nature two billion years ago. However, two years of feverish research work at the ancient reactor sites confirmed the CEA's interpretation, and the scientific findings were summarized in 1975 at a specially convened conference. One of the conference sessions was convened at a dramatic site on the floor of the open cut pit mine at Oklo on top of the fossil reactor site.

The generally accepted picture of what happened at Oklo is as follows: About two billion years ago the uranium from an entire water shed became concentrated at some local deposits in the delta of a river system. A nuclear chain reaction was established and continued for approximately 200,000 years until it had significantly depleted the U235, and the chain reaction stopped.

The system was not explosive and appears to have run at a level of some tens of kilowatts; the water which is necessary for the reaction to proceed was expelled when the power level became too large. A total of six natural fossil reactors have now been found at Oklo in a uranium ore vein approximately one meter thick and approximately 20 meters long.

It is interesting that the period of time involved since the Oklo reactors shut down is so long that the radioactive wastes are now too weakly radioactive to provide any useful data.

A more conventional chemical assay method called mass spectrometry had been used to unambiguously identify exactly where, and for how long, the chain reaction took place. Clearly the Oklo phenomenon affords workers in radioactive waste disposal technology a unique opportunity to study any possible migration of wastes with a time scale and mass of wastes which cannot be equalled in an experiment.

It has been estimated that approximately six tons of radioactive wastes were produced at Oklo. This is equivalent to running a 1,000 megawatt CANDU reactor for 15 years without any protective covering on the fuel or containment building!

Elements displaced

Experts at the Oklo conference concluded that the "escape of radioactive products from the Oklo reactor zone was quite limited". The heavy atomic elements have remained fixed, but in the intervening two billion years there has been some displacement of elements such as xenon, rubidium, barium, molybdenum and iodine.

The search is on in several countries for further fossil reactors. Some experts feel that the prospects of finding additional reactors are good, and one can even speculate that we have unknowingly mined some fossil reactors in the last few decades.

Losing nerve and respect

VANCOUVER — A politician can survive many things: Dullness, a fuzziness in judgment, a lack of a superior brain, a tendency to reward friends.

The one thing he cannot survive is lack of nerve.

This unwelcome affliction has struck the strangest victim in the land — a former tough guy called Bill Bennett. The premier of B.C., who plays a ferocious game of tennis and drives himself close to exhaustion with his lonely workpace, is suddenly gaining the reputation of a man who panics.

It is not a pleasant transition to watch and it seems to confirm the growing impression that Bennett may be coming to the finish of a political career.

Puzzled business

The high-school dropout who made a million on his own after he left the house of his millionaire father has puzzled the entire British Columbia business community with his latest example of faintheartedness.

Just two days before the opening of the legislature, Bennett announced a mystifying seven-year ban on the exploration and mining of uranium in the province.

What was so silly about the announcement was that a royal commission — appointed by Bennett — was about to deliver its report on the issue after two years of work.

The strange forces that now rule the Bennett decisions did not take into account that Dr. David Bates, the University of B.C. medicine and physiology professor who headed the commission, was in Australia continuing his study when his mission was suddenly aborted.

"We are back in the days of superstition and witchcraft," said Rick Higgs, manager of the B.C. and Yukon chamber of mines. More likely, we are back in the days of stage fright.

What appears to have buckled the Bennett knees was the threat of a major demonstration (a regular feature of B.C. street theatre) at the televised opening of the assembly.

Members of Greenpeace, the Vancouver-based ecology evangelists who have become a worldwide force with their ocean expedition to save the whales, had planned to have trained mountaineers scale the rocky cliffs of the legislature and generally create havoc.

The thought of his parliament covered by a swarm of protestors with pick axes and scaling ropes — a sure-fire embarrassment to delight national if not international TV — was too much for the premier.

Bennett, in killing the royal commission, cited the "fears expressed by the people of the province relating to uranium."

All very strange, since the Bates commission outlined those fears in a preliminary report to Bennett in September. He didn't respond — until last week.

MiniWac's knuckling under to the formidable environmental pressure groups of B.C. is just the latest example of of the deterioration of his leadership.

Increasingly, the lack of nerve has displayed itself.

When the piffling little "scandal" surfaced about minor Social Credit flunkies faking letters to the papers, Bennett, instead of dealing with it swiftly and decisively went on holidays and let his underlings fumble it into something major.

When premiers Peter Lougheed and Allan Blakeney were conferring with then-prime minister Joe Clark on energy pricing, Bennett was off again to the California sun and further Keystone Kops confusion to the extent that his own office in Victoria claimed not to know where he was.

Perhaps most damaging of all in the long run, Bennett blithely announced that he would be in Hawaii on Feb. 18, wouldn't be voting and left the clear impression that he didn't think the whole thing was worthwhile since the Liberals were going to get back in.

Like Rene

It left the premier of B.C. aligned with the views of Rene Levesque who hadn't bothered voting either and could see no reason to bother with a federal exercise.

The puzzling loner who is Bill Bennett was criticized within his party during his first few years because of his intimidating manner toward the academically trained cabinet ministers he inherited.

Now the criticism is not that he is a bully. The word is that he has lost his nerve. He has certainly lost the respect of the voters.

A global dream

It's one of those crazy dreams that's almost too big to be contemplated. A plot of land alongside the Patricia Bay Highway that is now ready to be turned over to Saanich municipality. A well-known television and film actor who is looking for a new challenge. And a tiny group of Victorians determined to build a replica of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre and begin a full Shakespearean festival.

It is, in itself, such stuff as plays are made of.

Yet, listening to the actor (Barry Morse of The Fugitive fame), and the group that Morse describes as "able desperadoes", there is a strangely compelling quality about the conversation. Their belief in both the worth and the practicality of the project is so strong that it is difficult not to become a believer too.

They know that the festival would be a major tourist attraction for the Victoria area and a major addition to the arts scene of all western Canada. They know that a full working replica of the Globe (complete with thatch and dozens of true standing-room-only places) would be unique in the world, something never before accomplished.

They know that it is a good, honest, worthwhile dream. And somehow that is enough.

It isn't enough, of course. The "able desperadoes" know it too. They know that the dream can be made to live only with the infusion of land (apparently settled now that Saanich is assured of receiving the Maltwood site at Royal Oak), construction, actors, producers, and money. A great deal of money, although no exact (or even inexact) price tag has yet been hung on the scale models of the Globe.

To date, the group is remarkably vague on these practical matters. They can give no estimate of either the capital or operating costs of such a project. They are unclear about construction details. (Shakespeare had neither fire regulations nor the National Building Code to worry about, and it seems questionable whether suggestions of fireproof thatch and extra fire exits will be enough to satisfy a fire marshal.) They either do not know or decline to say where their financing will come from. They talk about exceptional and widespread community support, but produce nothing more than some help from the local Real Estate Board in such matters as sponsoring a Rudy Vallee benefit concert. They say they hope and expect to open sometime during 1981 but have no concrete timetable as to what will happen when. They know they wish to concentrate on Shakespeare's 37 plays, but cannot say how they might develop a company of Shakespearean actors.

Morse must not be blamed for this. At the time he was introduced to a press reception as the group's new artistic director, he had been hired by them for less than 24 hours.

But the group itself has been working on the project for months and it seems odd that no one anywhere has any idea of these practical details.

Yet still, for all their vagueness, impracticality, and lack of detail, their conversation is compelling. Morse, who appears to have the ability to sell eight-cylinder cars to people waiting in a two-mile gas line-up, exudes enthusiasm. He talks of receiving advice from his wife and his doctor to find himself some excitement in a "cause", then of being phoned by the group (officially called the Lord Chamberlain Players' Society) within a matter of days. His speech is a delightful combination of sincere dedication, humor and whimsy, liberally sprinkled with appropriate Shakespearean quotations.

The "able desperadoes" cannot fit words and numbers to their dream, but they have a colorful and unwavering picture of it in their head, and they can communicate that picture clearly and well. They can make every person present in a room see a rough, wooden theatre, perhaps a little dim and dark, with Shakespearean actors dressed in bright-colored costumes, reciting the words of the plays before an applauding, cheering crowd of hundreds.

It's not a bad dream, that.

What the rest of Victoria must hope is that the dreamers can conjure up enough practical experience and know-how, and enough financial help, to allow it to come to life for them — and for all of us.

The sperm conceit

BOSTON — A dozen years ago, when William Shockley first began talking about improving the stock of the human race, nobody knew that he was going to try to do it all by himself.

Back then, you may recall, the man who won a Nobel Prize for making transistors starting talking about making babies. He believed that the world would be better off with more smart people than dumb people, and that intelligence was inherited.

Therefore, he suggested that the best way to improve the world was to set up sperm banks for very smart men and impregnate very smart women. As an amateur geneticist, he sounded like an expert in making transistors.

Well, now it turns out that a 74-year-old California businessman, Robert K. Graham, has actually founded an exclusive sperm bank. In what sounds like a Woody Allen script, he solicits donations from Nobel Prize scientists only — Peace Prize and literature prize winners need not apply. And guess who was among the first three donors? William-Father-of-the-Year-Shockley.

When I first heard this piece of news out of the Los Angeles Times, I was stunned by the sheer conceit of the donors. The belief in the superiority of your sperm — even 70-year-old sperm — can only come from long nights spent re-reading the Stockholm speeches. If ego is carried along by the DNA, the three women impregnated so far in this program will give birth to a trio of miserably conceited little monsters.

The Repository for Germinal Choice (I did not make that name up) is a phallic symbol . . . without the symbolism. But there is more here than meets the ovum.

In the past two weeks, we have had this bulletin about a sperm bank for propagation of elite in California and another tale about a program for sterilization of 4,000 "misfits" from 1922 to 1972 in Lynchburg, Va. These [illegible] entries in the historic [illegible] of genetic control.

For over a century, the U.S. has debated whether heredity or environment is most important in determining the physical, mental and "moral" health of a human being.

In mid-19th century Massachusetts, the poor Irish who lived in slums with virtually no health care had a higher infant mortality rate than others. An extensive study conducted by Massachusetts Brahmins blamed it on their "weaker genetic stock." After the First World War, when the country went through a fit of xenophobia, they used I.Q. tests at Ellis Island to "prove" that most of the Jewish, Hungarian, Italian and Russian immigrants were "feebleminded."

In the same vein, an old study of Harvard College graduates lamented the fact that the educated Harvardians under-reproduced themselves. Early birth-control advocates put it bluntly: "More children from the fit; less children from the unfit."

In short, the situation at Lynchburg was only a more efficient example of a fairly popular concept. People categorized rather blithely as retards and "misfits" — including young women who were committed for being sexually active — were to be prevented from polluting the genetic pool. No one ever proved that they had genetic diseases.

Well, in the 1930s, due to a well-known eugenicist named Adolph, a lot of these theories fell into disrepute. But they started percolating up through the surface of social reform again about 10 years ago when Arthur Jensen, Richard Herrnstein and, yes, "Papa" Shockley started putting forth theories that I.Q. was largely inherited.

Shockley not only endorsed the concept of "increasing the people at the top of the population" but also of "reducing the tragedy of the genetically disadvantaged at the bottom." Not coincidentally, he believes that blacks are genetically less intelligent than whites. Here we go back to Ellis Island.

There are reasons why the notions of "genetic inferiority and superiority" become popular from time to time. When we lose confidence or interest in reforming the environment, we are more likely to blame genes.

If an underclass exists in a democratic society, we want to blame their "stock" rather than our system. When the economic times are hard, I think we are also more likely to think in terms of controlling people rather than helping them. When social programs seem messy and complicated and exhausting, we turn to the efficient engineering of science.

It all sounds so logical. Cast genius sperm upon the world, like Johnny Appleseed, and you will get a crop of geniuses. But genetically it just ain't so. Furthermore, the definition of a successful human life isn't as simple as that of a successful race horse. Genius is more than genes.

And if you're in the market for some Shockley sperm, think about this: You might end up with the genes of a lousy geneticist instead of a decent transistor.

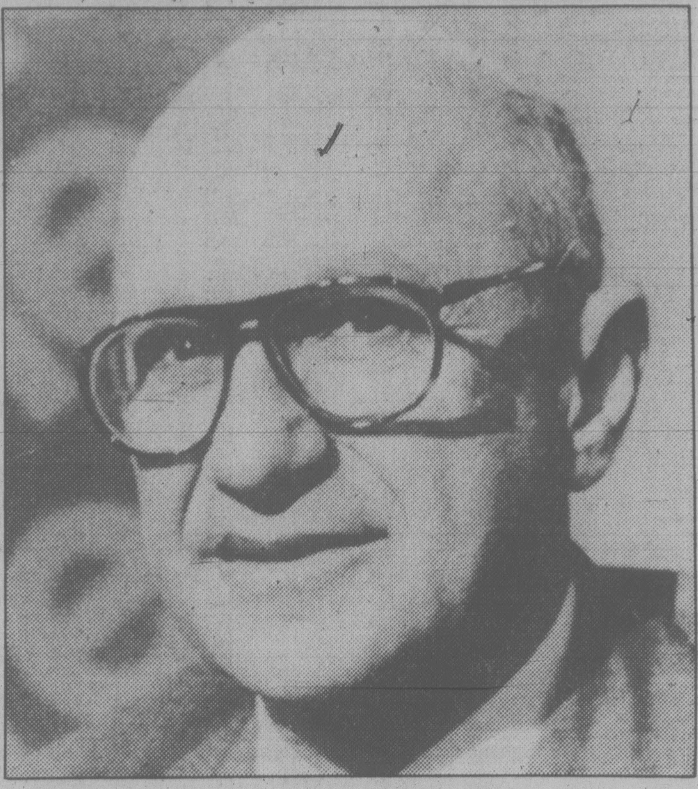
THATCHER
. . . recession ahead

Economic guru's policy stirs storm in Britain



FRIEDMAN . . . plugging a book and fighting critics

By LEONARD DOWNIE Jr.

LONDON — Crusading conservative economist Milton Friedman, whose free-market philosophy seemed to have found its crowning jewel in the policies of Margaret Thatcher, has stumbled into a political storm here over how the British prime minister has put his theories into practice.

Thatcher has come under attack from increasingly aggressive critics in Parliament and the press, including influential dissidents in her own cabinet and Conservative Party, because her survival-of-the-fittest policies appear to be accelerating rather than slowing the rapid deterioration of the British economy.

While she has been following the Friedman formula of restricting the money supply — cutting public spending and reducing government involvement in the economy — there have been alarming increases in inflation, unemployment and interest rates.

The auto, steel, shipbuilding, textile and other ailing manufacturing industries have continued to sag and a damaging steel strike has entered its third month. According to the latest independent economic forecasts, Britain is entering its worst post-war recession, which could last for the next two years.

Thatcher's critics turned their fire toward Friedman when they found him here the past few weeks proselytizing in a BBC television series, delivering university lectures, meeting with Thatcher and her top economic advisers at 10 Downing Street, and promoting his U.S. best-seller Free to Choose, just published here.

In a running debate with Friedman on television and in the press, opposition politicians, labor leaders, liberal economists and commentators and even some captains of industry castigated his theories as simplistic, out-of-date and dangerously divisive.

Smiling reassuringly throughout, the short, balding University of Chicago economist remained calmly confident in the eye of the storm, happy to have to have won so much attention for himself and his crusade for capitalism.

Winner of the Nobel Prize in 1976, in recognition of the growing influence of his "Chicago School" advocacy of free-market economics and "monetarist" theories about controlling inflation by controlling the supply of money, Friedman sees Thatcher's test of his policies as vital to their wider acceptance in the United States.

"What happens here in Britain will have a very important influence in the U.S.," he said in an interview before returning home. "If Thatcher succeeds, it will be very encouraging. It is a fascinating experiment, and a good deal depends on it."

But critics such as Britain's ranking labor leader, Len Murray, general secretary of the Trade Unions Congress, fear that "adoption of Prof. Friedman's monetarist policies (is) leading to the destruction of our productive industries and an attack on the welfare state. If we go along with these policies for much longer, we could end up like a banana republic on which Prof. Friedman is such an expert."

In his televised lectures here advocating the elimination of all government interference in free enterprise, from minimum wage laws to social welfare programs, Friedman has cited the economies of Japan, South Korea and Malaysia as contemporary examples of where "the invisible guiding hand" of an unfettered free market predictably has produced profits.

In one of the BBC debates staged here after each lecture in the series, televised earlier in the United States, a leading liberal economist at Cambridge University, Bob Rowthorne, accused Friedman of misleading his audience by "oversimplifying" the development of those Asian countries and economics in general.

Industrialist Lord Kearton, former chairman of the Courtaulds Chemical conglomerate and the British National Oil Corp., told Friedman he was impossible to argue with because he had made this theories into "a religion" and "had become a world figure because you don't let anyone else get a word in edgewise."

A leader of the left wing of the opposition Labor Party, Eric Heffer, wrote in The Times of London, "Despite his academic qualifications and Nobel Prize, Prof. Friedman is, like Mrs. thatcher's government, only up to A-levels (high school requirements) in his economic thinking. His theories are so simplistic that one could be forgiven for believing he looks upon the people as having a mental age of no more than 15 or 16."

Leading liberal columnist Peter Jenkins of The Guardian, arguing that "the Thatcher revolution is nearing the end of its first flush of enthusiasm" because its policies are not working, added: "As for Friedmanism, the master's weekly appearance on television cannot be doing much in steady the Conservative Party's nerve."

"So this is the guy Margaret and Geoffrey have been going on about," Jenkins observed, referring to Thatcher and her chancellor of the Exchequer, Geoffrey Howe, "this potty-sounding professor wearing the confident smile of a flat-earther who seems to think that we should shut up shop and 'buy Chinese.' "

Even the conservative elder statesmen of economic commentators here, Samuel Brittan of The Financial Times, distanced himself from Friedman. Arguing that Thatcher's critics made the term monetarism a "scare word" synonomous with her entire rightist philosophy, he insisted that monetarism was not "the same thing as the world outlook of Prof. Friedman."

While a less confident warrior for his cause might have broken and run under this barrage, Friedman stood his ground. He said he expected nasty attacks here because "in the Oxford and Cambridge tradition there is more emphasis on debate points and ad hominem attacks, more emphasis on effect and less on substance."

"But much more fundamentally," he said, "Britain, and much of the world, is at a turning point after a 50 to 60-year run of Fabian socialism." Thatcher's election in his view could mark the turning away from the welfare state back to the free-market economies of the 19th century.

"Mrs. Thatcher was elected to produce dramatic change and that's what she is trying to carry out," Friedman said. "That's why opinions are so strong."

He believes the intellectuals who sneer at him here are now out of step with "the bulk of public opinion in both Britain and the United States, which is more in line with my views and Mrs. Thatcher's."

She and her cabinet will succeed in the end if they stay on course through predictably difficult months ahead, according to Friedman, although he would like to see them make still more government spending cuts.

"I'm not surprised at the resistance right now," Friedman said. "Cutting government spending is like making an addict go through withdrawal. No alcoholic likes you to take away his bottle."

"But if they do stick to their policies and two years from now they begin to show effects," he added, "people will be singing a different tune."

Letters to the editor

He didn't vote

The premier of B.C. stated to the press that he would not vote in the Feb. 18 federal election. In this instance he was true to his word. This was one promise he kept.

As one who served overseas in the Canadian Army during World War II, I find this appalling and disgraceful. There are those who never returned, lying in cemeteries in foreign lands, who sincerely believed we were there to preserve the rights of people to a free vote in a free country.

He has set a bad example to the young people of this country and brought shame to the province. This is nothing less than a national disgrace, and I call upon the Royal Canadian Legion and other servicemen's organizations to bring him to task.

This time we are all witness to the dirtiest trick of them all. — Gordon Townsend, 927 Walker Street.

Inhumanities

This is in response to Dick Dabney's article of Feb. 25, "Of Arms and the Boy".

For years the evidence has been growing as to the inhumanities resorted to by tyrannical regimes of all political stripes, to preserve themselves in power. It is now evident that even the torture and mutilation of little children are seen as acceptable means by which to quell opposition. How long can any civilization survive, which allows such horrors to go on? Yet the indications are that western countries, including Canada, must have known something of what went on during the Shah's regime.

We may have scant sympathy for the revolutionary regime in Iran, but I feel that the demand for a full inquiry into the political crimes committed under the Shah's regime is completely justified. Evidence from such an inquiry should have worldwide publicity. Directly or indirectly, we in the West helped to maintain that regime in power. Now ordinary people everywhere need to know just how far we all have gone on the road to barbarism.

For too long we have been told that those in authority always know best, and that common sense dictates we put our own national interests ahead of merely humanitarian concerns. No argument whatever can justify the mutilation of that little boy in Iran, and yet the evidence is there that systematic torture and persecution continue to be policy in many countries throughout the world.

Let's hear our government's stand on the evidence that emerges. Did we Canadians ever condone or ignore the sort of hideous measures now brought to light in Iran? What is Canadian policy when dealing with regimes that maintain themselves in power by torture and persection? — Hanne Quillevere, 1790 Chandler Avenue.

Who can smoke?

On Feb. 26 I had the misfortune to travel to and from Vancouver via Departure Bay and Horseshoe Bay on the B.C. Ferry Queen of Burnaby.

We went to the cafeteria for a meal (incidentally dreadful). My husband and I went into the left hand side of the cafeteria very liberally marked "Non-Smoking." At the table directly behind us sat abundantly gold-braided officers, eating their meal, and one was, to our observation, smoking his second cigarette.

When the stewardess came to clear our dishes I asked her if this was the non-smoking section.

She replied "it certainly is," so I indicated the table behind and commented that one of the men was smoking.

Her reply was "But they're officers."

I asked "Does that make a difference?"

She went and whispered to one of the officers at the table, who glared in our direction, but the smoking continued.

As we were finishing our meal, another officer produced a package of cigarettes. My husband went over to the table and asked who was the senior officer. One replied, "I am, I guess."

My husband again reiterated, "This is the non-smoking section," to which he immediately replied "No one is smoking."

My husband replied "That's exactly why I'm asking you before this man lights his cigarette."

The attitude of the officers of this ferry, the Queen of Burnaby, was complete indifference. I personally find that people smoking while I am eating is most offensive, and I know that I am not alone in this situation. Presumably this is why there is a non-smoking section.

I can only assume that if this is the attitude of the officers of the Queen of Burnaby it is no wonder the ferry service is having problems.

It used to be a pleasure to travel on the ferries; now a trip to Vancouver becomes an exercise in frustration. Just a few years ago, the B.C. Ferry system was a service to be proud of, now it is an abysmal disgrace. — Pauline Taylor, Duncan.

Remember George

On your sport pages of Feb. 27, Ernie Fedoruk, obviously a young writer, refers to John Mariucci, assistant general manager of the NHL's Minnesota team as "the first American-born player to make it big in the National Hockey League."

Obviously Mr. Fedoruk never heard of George Owen, the Harvard graduate, who played for the Boston Bruins in the Eddie Shore era. He, too, was a defenceman. — Vince Lunny, 406 - 350 Linden Avenue.

Capital spending to rise by 12%

OTTAWA (CP) — Capital spending by all sectors of the economy during 1980 is estimated at $63.89 billion, up 12 per cent from a year ago, say figures released today by Statistics Canada.

New construction is expected to account for $38.64 billion of that, an increase of 9.4 per cent from 1979, with residential construction taking up $11.53 billion.

Acquisition of new machinery and equipment is estimated to account for $25.24 billion, or 16.2 per cent more than last year.

Total capital spending by the business sector is expected to reach $43.78 billion, 16.7 per cent higher than 1979. Mining and oil and gas wells are forecast to be the strongest industrial group, where spending is expected to rise by 32.9 per cent.

In the institutional and government group, the increase of 6.3 per cent for a total of $8.58 billion is mainly due to increased capital spending by municipal governments, up 16.2 per cent, at $2.9 billion this year from 1979.

It is estimated that provincial governments will spend $2.78 billion, up 4.1 per cent from a year ago, with schools increasing 8.8 per cent at $61 million and hospitals going up 9.6 per cent at $62 million.

The remaining $2.77 billion is for federal capital spending.

'79 trade deficit down

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada had a 1979 deficit of $5.02 billion in its international payments, down from $5.3 billion for 1978 and a dramatic improvement from the forecast $7-billion deficit, Statistics Canada reported.

The federal agency said the smaller deficit reflected a rise of $600 million in the merchandise trade surplus and a drop of $600 million in the travel deficit.

But the major cause of the large deficit continued to be interest and dividends payments abroad. There was an increase of $800 million in net payments of interest and dividends to foreign investors and $550 million in other services transactions.

Foreign long-term capital investment in 1979 stood at an unadjusted $3.2 billion, virtually unchanged from 1978. But major movements within the account were a lower number of new issues abroad, higher retirements of bonds and an increase in purchases of foreign equities.

The slower activity in Canadian investment abroad was partially offset by increased foreign investment in Canadian shares and through the takeover of Canadian companies.

company reports

BP Canada

BP Canada Inc.'s net profit for 1979 was up 92.8 per cent over 1978, the company has announced.

The company made $63.1 million last year, or $2.97 a common share, compared to a restated $32.7 million, or $1.55 a common share, in 1978.

In a statement, the company attributed the increased profit to improved margins on the sale of refined products and improved returns from resource operations.

The company's capital expenditure, exploration expenditures and research costs amounted to $98.5 million in 1979, compared to $62.9 million the previous year.

Coca-Cola

The Coca-Cola Co. announced its profits rose 11 per cent last year to a record $420.1 million U.S. from $374.7 million in 1978 and said it is increasing its quarterly dividend 10.2 per cent to 54 cents from 49 cents a share.

The world's leading soft drink company earned $3.40 a share in 1979, up from $3.03 a share in 1978, as sales increased 14.4 per cent to a record $4.9 billion from $4.3 billion in 1978.

Fourth-quarter 1979 profits were a record $89.1 million, or 72 cents a share, up eight per cent from $82.5 million, or 66 cents a share, for the same quarter in 1978. Sales jumped rose 16.7 per cent to a record $1.2 billion from $1.1 billion in the three-month 1978 period.

Union Oil

Union Oil Co. of Canada Ltd. recorded net earnings of $19.3 million in 1979, 42-per-cent more than the restated net earnings of $13.6 million in 1978, J. L. MacLagan, company treasurer and vice-president of finance, announced.

The earnings represent a 16.6-per-cent return on shareholders' equity and a 13.2-per-cent return on average assets employed.

Total revenues in 1979 reached $103.1 million. MacLagan said the 12-per-cent increase from the 1978 total resulted from improved product prices and higher natural gas production.

Cash flow from operations increased 17 per cent to $49.6 million, or $3.43 a share, from $42.2 million, or $2.94 a share.

Big year for wheat

By VICTOR MACKIE

OTTAWA — World wheat consumption is expected to exceed production by 15 to 20 million tonnes this year, according to the findings of economists in the federal department of agriculture.

The strong demand for wheat as a result, it is estimated, will result in an 11 per cent increase in world wheat trade, they said in the department's monthly report issued Friday.

Canadian farmers will have to plant about 26 million acres of wheat and increase barley plantings to 12 million acres this spring to fill export and domestic needs in 1980-81.

Canadian wheat exports are forecast to be between 14.5 and 16.5 million tonnes in 1980-81 because of continued strong world demand.

Canada's wheat and flour exports in 1979-80 are forecast to be 13.25 to 14.75 million tonnes, up from last year's 13.1 million tonnes.

World coarse grain prices should remain above current levels for the remainders of the 1979-80 crop year because of strong export demand and the effects of the U.S. grain programs.

World trade in coarse grains is expected to remain high

U.S. wholesale prices soar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices soared 1.5 per cent in February, nearly matching January's surge, but unemployment declined slightly to six per cent, the U.S. government reported Friday.

February's increase in the labor department's producer price index showed little improvement from January's 1.6 per cent rise, in good part because of near-record increases in gasoline and home heating oil prices.

If prices at the producer level — one step short of retail — continue to rise for the next 10 months at the same rate as in the first two, inflation at wholesale will exceed 20 per cent.

Wholesale prices last year went up 12.5 per cent, the largest increase since the Middle East oil embargo sent prices soaring more than 18 per cent in 1974.

The labor department's report on unemployment showed joblessness down from 6.2 per cent in January to six per cent in February. In both months, about 6.3 million persons were out of work.

As in 1974, price increases on crude oil imported from members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries again are the main cause of the U.S.'s inflation problem, said John Layng, a labor department analyst.

Rentex denies deception

The manager of Rentex, a Victoria rental agency, today denied charges by Ald. Robin Blencoe the firm has used deceptive and misleading trades practices.

Brian Cripps expressed surprise at Blencoe's Friday comments.

"We work hard at being a reputable business," he said.

Blencoe said he will ask the provincial consumer and corporate affairs ministry to look into the practices of the company following complaints he'd received about the firm advertising vacancies without the permission of owners.

Cripps said he'd welcome the move.

"If that's what it is going to take to get you guys and Blencoe off our backs, then they (the officials) can come in any time they want and have a look around," Cripps said.

Blencoe said he has received complaints about the firm, the latest from a large townhouse complex in Gordon Head which said Rentex was advertising vacancies $100 below the listed rent and without the permission of the owners.

Cripps said he was mystified to which complex Blencoe was referring.

He admitted the firm sometimes advertises accommodation without the permission of owners but the incidents are few.

In most cases, permission is obtained beforehand, he said.

The company charges $35 for a list of vacancies.

Blencoe said clients may believe they are getting an exclusive list but in fact most of the listings are lifted from newspaper ads.

"We tell our people some of the advertising will be common with the ads," said Cripps. "But we also have a number of listings which are exclusive."

Blencoe said that while the company is doing nothing illegal, its practices are questionable from a moral and ethical point of view.

Income tax discounters given warning

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen has promised tough measures will be taken against unscrupulous tax discounters who charge more than permitted by statute.

Nielsen said Friday rebaters cannot provide less than 85 per cent of the tax refund anticipated by the borrower.

"The practice of over-charging on tax rebates is illegal," he said, adding his ministry will react quickly and forcefully to complaints.

Nielsen said taxpayers should wait for the full tax rebate if possible, but those who need money immediately should never sell their right to the refund for less than 85 per cent of its value.

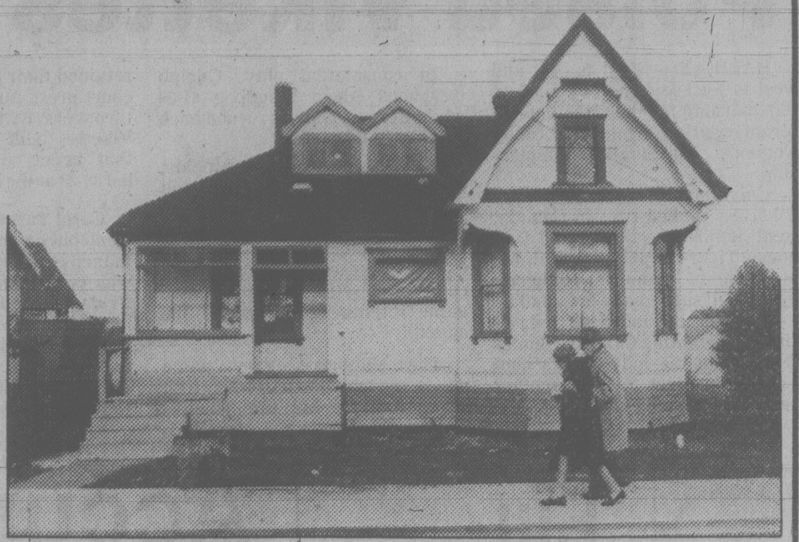
The rescue of old 522

$60,000 joint effort on Simcoe house



'Late Victorian picturesque' is the style of Jackson home

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The provincial heritage trust has approved an involved $60,000 rescue plan in which half a dozen private groups and government agencies are co-operating to save an 80-year-old house in James Bay from demolition.

It is so far the most sophisticated method by which a heritage building has been preserved and it could establish a precedent where a "revolving fund" is used to save other threatened structures.

The trust last week endorsed the scheme to move the so-called Jackson house at 522 Simcoe to a vacant lot on nearby Parry Street, now a government employees' parking lot owned by the B.C. Buildings Corporation.

The Hallmark Society, a local organization dedicated to preserving historic buildings, hopes to restore the old home. It plans to move its library and archives there and make the house a demonstration project in preservation techniques, president Stuart Stark said.

At the same time, the move will allow the James Bay Multi-level Care Society to proceed with its $1.9-million intermediate care home on property surrounding the old home.

It announced plans for the 70-bed home last year but the city held up a demolition permit until a way could be found to keep the house.

The heritage trust — a perpetual fund endowed by the provincial government — is acting as middleman in the transaction. Under the agreement negotiated by vice-chairman Mike Young, formerly mayor of Victoria, the Hallmark Society will get first chance to buy the house and property when it has the money, sometime in the next 12 months.

Until then, BCBC will hold title to the $35,000 lot in escrow, Young said. The trust is putting up about $25,000 to move the house, build a new foundation and reconnect water, sewer and electrical sevices. The work will be supervised by the heritage conservation branch in the Provincial Secretary's ministry and charged later to Hallmark.

It plans a public campaign to gather the necessary funds to pay for the takeover and restoration, said Don Reksten, chairman of the society's Heritage Building Foundation. Donations may be sent to P.O. Box 1204, Victoria.

Once it has assumed the mortgage, the foundation plans to rent out suites in the basement and on the second floor, with the rent hopefully balancing the mortgage payments.

Young said the Provincial Capital Commission still must approve the plan, since the new site is government-owned property within the general Legislative Buildings precinct where it controls development. It may decide to retain ownership of the lot on Parry, Young said.

Heritage buffs will have the use of the main floor of the Jackson house for their files and extensive library, which will be open to the public, and for public meeting space.

Hallmark established the foundation for just such a purpose three years ago but it hasn't been able to raise any funds.

It has played a key role in generating public support in the 1970s to save many heritage buildings in Victoria but 522 Simcoe will be its first direct attempt at rescuing a house.

"The move itself we hope will take place in the middle of March," Stark said.

The house is not designated as a heritage dwelling by city council (which would prohibit demolition or exterior alteration), although it is on the primary list and is considered part of the city's "outstanding residential heritage."

It's a fairly typical James Bay house, Stark said. Late Victorian picturesque is the general description of the style. The house was built about 1901 for Richard Jackson, manager of the insurance division of B.C. Land and Insurance Co.

"Ornamentation is elaborate but suppressed to single configurations and abstract sunburst designs in the gable and brackets," said the city's catalogue of heritage houses, This Old House.

"Particularly unusual is the hint of art nouveau in the gabled bargeboard profiles."

Stark said the original house was altered over the years, with the addition of a big dormer at the back during the 1920s. The front porch also was closed in. He said Hallmark will try to restore the house as closely as possible to its original condition and design.

the house

by jake banky

So you think the scenes inside and outside the house this week were shocking. Not at all top-drawer. Simply not done. Damned poor show.

Well, compared to the peccadilloes of our political predecessors it was a mere fleabite on the legislative rump.

Thumbing through the yellowed, crumbly newsprint of an 80-year-old copy of the Times we come across a situation that would cause any political reporter to have palpitations.

I can only pay respect in retrospect to the polite restraint of the unidentified journalist who wrote the account of "The Opposition's Attempt to Steal Mr. Joseph Martin's Seat."

Back in 1900 Joe Martin and Richard McBride were rival opposition leaders. Both felt they had the right to claim the seat of the official leader of the opposition.

On the day in question, while the Rev. Canon Beanlands was saying prayers, the two leaders and their followers began edging in on the coveted chair. Now read on:

"As the last word of the Lord's prayer was uttered, Mr. Curtis seized Mr. Martin around the neck and tried to drag him away.

"Mr. Houston and Mr. Gilmour came to Mr. Martin's assistance and Messrs. McPhillips, McBride and Curtis struggled with them for possession of the chair in which Mr. Martin managed to retain himself during the fracas.

"The galleries howled with delight as the contestants swung to and fro and cheers went up when it was seen that 'Fighting Joe' had carried his point.

"The speaker called repeatedly for order and only succeeded in securing quiet by threatening to clear the galleries.

"Finally, when order was restored, Mr. Martin sat in his accustomed place while Mr. McBride sat on the desk in front of him."

The Times reporter paid lip service to the "fundamental principles of parliamentary procedure" but clearly he was gratified by Martin's victory. Everybody loves a winner.

Anyhow, both Martin and McBride went on to become premiers of this fair province.

Those were the days. At least the politicians knew what they were fighting about — a chance to sit down. Nowadays the issues are more obscure.

Arthur Elworthy, head of the B.C. Steamship Co., has come out of the closet. It turns out he's a Maggie-lover after all. Unfortunately his conversion comes too late.

The government has based its decision to mothball the Princess Marguerite on what Elworthy was saying 18 months ago. It's too late to admit change now, petitions notwithstanding.

There may be some slight satisfaction in the likelihood that Elworthy will go down with his ship.

It was Elworthy who first began promoting the idea of replacing the Marguerite. He had his eye on the palatial Queen of Surrey for the Victoria-Seattle service. In fact he was counting on it.

The government's decision to dump the Maggie was based on Elworthy's one-sided interpretation of some rather inadequate engineering reports.

That decision was reinforced by Elworthy's threat last August to resign if the Marguerite ran even one more season.

But much to Arthur's chagrin, the Queen of Surrey was committed to the mid-coast service and B.C. Steamship ended up with the cold leftover, the ugly duckling, the woefully inadequate Queen of Prince Rupert.

Sudden conversion. Flash of light. Elworthy becomes a born-again Maggie-pusher.

Nothing wrong with the old girl a little money couldn't cure, he says. Best ship for the run. Save the princess. Damn the politicians, full speed ahead!

But Transportation Minister Alex Fraser, a hardheaded Cariboo farm implement dealer who knows a worn-out widget when he sees one, does not get sentimental about old cruise ships. He has made his decision and he is sticking to it, come Elworthy of high water.

Tough luck Maggie.

Goodbye Arthur.

Tremor rattles up-island

An earthquake centred in Strathcona Provincial Park shook north central Vancouver Island Friday afternoon, rattling cups and shaking buildings in Tahsis and Gold River on the west coast and Campbell River to the east.

The 1:36 p.m. quake registered five on the Richter scale.

A telephone operator in Campbell River said she was washing dishes when the quake struck.

"I really felt that (the quake) and I'm in Campbell River," she said.

She said windows were shaking and dishes rattling.

She didn't know what had happened until she got to work and she heard others talking about it.

In Tahsis Hospital, the quake was felt as two shocks, each lasting about five seconds. There was no damage.

A Pacific Geoscience Centre spokesman in Victoria confirmed there had been more than a tremor and that there were two shocks, each lasting several minutes.

"It was an earthquake, all right, bigger than the one under Pender Island four years ago," he said.

But residents would have felt the shocks for only a few seconds, as the centre's instruments record the tremors as they progress through the earth.

At Strathcona Park Lodge, park employees were holding a meeting when the quake struck.

"It was a pretty horrendous experience," said Jim Boulding, an outdoor education director.

"The whole building started to shake. Somebody yelled, 'Hey, we're having an earthquake,' and there was no doubt about it."

"The centre of this quake was definitely in the park, to the west of the lodge," Boulding said.

There were a dozen park employees in the park at the time of the quake, along with about 50 Unitarians on an outdoor education course.

Boulding said he imagined this quake was much like one in the 40s when a ridge was knocked off Colonel Foster mountain.

At that time, debris plugged Landslide Lake, Boulding said. When the plug later broke, the flood washed away trees and left mounds of debris below the lake.

Propane car 'kicking' safe - engineer

There is no danger in CP Rail's practice of "kicking" loaded propane cars across the Johnson Street bridge, city engineer John Sansom said Friday.

After an explanation by railway officials, Sansom said he is satisfied the practice is safe.

The term "kicking" sounds alarming, but the cars are under control while they are crossing the bridge, he said.

CP Rail has followed a self-imposed weight limit for about a year, when the city began repairs to the old bridge, but Sansom said it was never in any danger of collapse even from the combined 200-ton weight of a propane car and a locomotive.

However, the city did impose a speed limit of five miles an hour for rail traffic while the repairs were being made. It used to be 15.

"The slower the better," Sansom said.

The bridge can better support a heavy load if it is moved slowly across than if it is pushed quickly.

When CP Rail "kicks" the cars across, the engine does not ram the car and bump it across. The engine pushes the car to the bridge, then releases it. A brakeman remains aboard to control it.

"It just creeps across at about one mile an hour," Sansom said.

Papers faulted on cancer data

By MIKE HUGHES

Newspapers have to shoulder some of the blame for a lot of misinformation about cancer and things that cause the killer disease, says Dr. Peter Coy, director of the Victoria Cancer Clinic.

Stories lacking background or detailed information often lead to widespread erroneous theories about the relationship between certain agents or products and cancer, he said in an interview.

He mentions food additives as an example.

They are generally thought to be unhealthy and one of the regressive things food companies have inflicted on consumers.

However, medical researchers now feel that food additives, because of their preservative qualities, are one of the factors leading to a drop in the number of stomach cancer cases in the western world, Coy says.

He says experts feel one of the things that caused stomach cancer was the fermentation process that was taking place in the food.

But now, with freezers and refrigerators, as well as the use of preservatives, the fermentation process is stalled.

"This is a good example of how people misunderstand something as being dangerous when, in fact, it is quite helpful," Coy says.

These and other misunderstandings will be dealt with March 18 at 8 p.m. in the Newcombe Auditorium at a public forum sponsored by the Times and the Victoria branch of the Canadian Cancer Society.

"One of the things we hope to do is settle some of the anxiety people have about cancer and the way in which certain aspects of the environment are thought to be responsible," Coy said.

COY
. . . forum chairman

He will be chairman of the forum and will be speaking on radiation and cancer.

Also on the panel will be Dr. Peter Dunn, specialist in biochemistry and a researcher at the University of B.C.'s department of medical genetics.

He will start off the forum with a talk on epidemiology, the study of the distribution of diseases in a group of people.

Dunn will also discuss methods to test new chemicals to see if they are carcinogenic or cancer causing.

Dr. Edwin Henry, occupational health physician for the provincial health ministry, will talk on dangers in the workplace using asbestos as an example.

Dr. Malcolm Brigden, a specialist in hematology on staff at the Victoria Cancer Clinic, will focus on smoking and lung cancer.

There will be a question period following the speakers and then a slide/tape presentation illustrating what happens when a person comes to the cancer clinic. A second question period will follow.

Outlining his own presentation, Dr. Coy said one of the major misunderstandings about the effects of radiation centres around the question of x-rays.

People have heard that chest x-rays or dental x-rays can be harmful and therefore they are refusing to have them, Coy says.

What is often lacking is an understanding of the degree of risk present in these x-rays, he says. People need more facts before making a decision not to do something which could be beneficial for them in the long run.

"We have to balance the risk of having the x-ray with the knowledge the x-ray can give."

Society should be aware of the potential hazards of radiation in order to be able to knowledgeably monitor those who are handling equipment such as x-ray machines, Coy says.

In the last 10 years, cancer specialists have discovered a lot of things in the environment which cause cancer. The difficulty is knowing what to do with that information.

"We can't throw the baby out with the bathwater.

"You have to balance the harm these things can do with the good they bring to society."

He uses the example of a skill saw.

"How many people have cut off their fingers with skill saws?

"But we don't, for that reason, ban skill saws because they can be useful."

There is no charge for tickets to the March 18 forum. They may be obtained by writing "Cancer Forum, Victoria Times, Box [illegible], Victoria, V8W 2N4," giving your name and address and the number of tickets required.

Or, starting Monday, you can pick up tickets at the Times' business office betwen 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. or at the Cancer Society's office at 857 Caledonia between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

No telephone requests, please.

Poised Vikettes gain final

HALIFAX — East is east and west is west and the two clashed this morning for the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union women's basketball championship.

University of Victoria's mighty Vikettes, ranked first in Canada, went against the third-rated Dalhousie Tigers for the Bronze Baby, symbolic of women's collegiate basketball supremacy in Canada.

Victoria advanced to today's final by defeating Calgary Dinnies 78-56 while the host Tigers beat Laurentian Vees 55-42 in another semi-final match Friday.

In consolation play, Guelph Gryphons edged Winnipeg 61-59 while Bishops Gaiters turned back Alberta Pandas 77-65.

Vikette coach Kathy Shields, the CIAU's coach-of-the-year, said she expects the partisan crowd to be a plus for the Tigers, beaten 70-50 by Victoria in an exhibition earlier this season. "But if we come in poised and play our own game I think we can win," she added.

The Victoria-Calgary game was a see-saw battle for the first seven minutes but the Vikettes retained their poise and their full-court press forced costly Calgary turnovers. By the 10-minute mark, Vikettes built up a 10-point lead that never diminished. Victoria led 38-28 at the half.

Carol Turney-Loos and Luanne Hebb put on an impressive performance to pace the Vikettes. Hebb, who celebrated her 21st birthday Friday, scored 27 points while Turney-Loos, the CIAU's player-of-the-year, added 26. But the two national team members combined on some pretty offensive moves that left the small crowd at Dalplex in awe.

Janis Paskevich and Lori Chizik paced Calgary with 16 apiece.

The Vees-Tigers match was a close battle in the first half with the lead changing hands several times. Dalhousie led 30-25 at the half but then the Vees found themselves in foul trouble early in the second half. Four of the starting five collected four fouls each by the five-minute mark. Dalhousie then went to work and increased the lead to 10 by the eight-minute mark and won easily.

With Canadians freed, will Carter call crash?

The week in review and now that Canadian athletes are free to compete in the Moscow Olympics — sports minister Gerald Regan has said so — I wonder if U.S. President Jimmy Carter's list of boycotters isn't being shredded, just a little bit.

When Carter announced his country's boycott of the Summer Olympics, he thought he had a number of countries in the bag who were willing to go along with the idea, one being Canada. And, on or about the same time, his chief Olympic adviser Lloyd Cutler reported on a fact-finding mission which indicated 23 countries had agreed to go along with the plan, 13 were probables and and another 19 had tendencies leaning in that direction.

But now it's not altogether certain that Carter's support is that solid, especially with Canadian athletes being cleared to go and Britain and Australia, two of the major countries expected to boycott the Games, waffling more than somewhat. The list of shirkers is growing.

Regan said the new Liberal govermnment would not prevent Canadian athletes from attending the Games. And if the government decided on a boycott, it would be a case of merely requesting that the Canadian Olympic Association not participate and that as far as he was concerned he didn't think the government would go beyond the request. During the election, former PM Joe Clark had promised to support Carter's boycott call. Regan said there would be no attempt to revoke passports or visas or threaten the athletes with a loss of financial aid. Only 13 per cent of Canadians favor a boycott as indicated in a recent Gallup poll.

Meanwhile, in Britain, prime minister Margaret Thatcher has turned that country's decision over to the British Olympic Committee, while in Australia, Olympic trials are going ahead, just in case.

And now everyone must be waiting with interest the revelation of the secret list of boycotters Carter is supposed to have. Stay tuned. It could prove interesting.

Speaking of the Olympics, the best editorial line of the Winter Games came from Red Smith of the New York Times:

"There is good news and there is bad news around the Winter Olympics. The good news is that the Soviet Union is ready to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. The bad news is that the Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee has the contract to bus them out."

TV golf addicts may or may not know it, but that grass that showed up as bright green against the otherwise dull brown of the fairways in the recent Tucson Open, wasn't that color because of heavy watering. No, it was painted, just as it is every year and especially for TV. . . . And from the learn-a-fact-a-day-dept: Did you know that 75 per cent of the players on the Professional Golfers Association tour earn under $50,000 a year . . . It might be noted too that the Gord Racette, who is making a minor name for himself as a heavyweight boxer since becoming a professional, is the same Racette who practiced on Western Lacrosse Association opponents during the past few seasons. Question is: will he be welcome here now that city council has ruled out a boxing commission? And no charge for the observation that Canadians shouldn't really complain about the gasoline price hike of last weekend. We've really never had it so good. On a recent California trip, the average cost per Imperial gallon of unleaded gasoline worked out to $1.73 Canadian. This included exchange, et al. Meals and accommodation were more reasonable, however, as they always are.

Well, Keith Linton has done it again. Just when it seemed that Joe Hudon might emerge as the Canadian harness driving champion, Linton closed the door. According to figures released by the Canadian Trotting Association, Linton has once again captured the Canadian driving title by finishing with a UDRS (Universal Drivers Rating System) of .390, a mere 12 points ahead of Chuck Fraleigh and just 14 ahead of Hudon. This is the fourth straight year that Linton has topped the standings. He also won in 1973 giving him the title for five of the last seven years. He won the North American title in 1973, 1977 and 1978 and is the only driver to win three times. In 1,0001 starts, Linton finished first 246 times, second 178 and third 135.

And Canadians still love the races. More than 13.3 million went to the track in 1979, a record, and wagered more than $1.4 billion, another mark. The provincial governments were the big winners, taking a total of $102.4 million. When Clark's election call came, off-track betting went back on the shelf, and just when it seemed it would come of age. The problem arose when agriculture minister John Wise was unable to make up his mind on the subject and had asked for more provincial input. Earlier it had been revealed that the provincial attorneys-general had indicated they favored an amendment to the federal criminal code which would permit OTB. Now Joe will never know how many friends he almost had.

It's early yet, but Pete LaCock, a first baseman for Kansas City Royals, so far has a long lead in the oddball-of-the-year awards list. When the Royals acquired Willie Mays Aikens from California Angels, LaCock must have figured his job was in danger, because he came up with the following solution: "If I'm not going to play, they're going to have to pay me more not to play than to play." Huh!

Accuracy absent but Vikings lead

By MAX LOW

If perhaps a little of the finesse and accuracy was missing Friday night, then confidence was the key ingredient as University of Victoria Vikings downed arch rival Calgary Dinosaurs 82-63 in the McKinnon Gymnasium and took another step nearer the national title.

With a 20-0 win-loss record this season in the Canada West and the league title already tucked safely away, and with four prior victories over the Dinosaurs, the Vikings took the court oozing confidence.

Unfortunately, they didn't have the shooting to go with it and struggled in the game's early stages. Though they had more chances, the Vikes kept hitting the rim and couldn't seem to get the ball to fall into the basket as they trailed Calgary for much of the first quarter.

By the end of those first 10 minutes, though, the Vikings had pulled level at 18-18 and then slowly inched ahead for a half-time lead of 43-35.

The UVic players came out even more confidently in the second half, and with Eli Pasquale using his speed to set Billy Loos up with some slick passes, they increased their lead to 14 points, at 60-46, after three quarters.

Loos, named with Pasquale this week to the Canada West all-star team, topped the point-getters with 21. Reni Dolcetti, who had a terrific duel throughout with Calgary's lanky forward Romel Raffin, scored 14 points while Pasquale and Gerald Kazanowski added 12 each.

Calgary was hurting without their six-ten all-star Steve Atkin, who is nursing a torn ligament, but got a fine performance from Raffin, another all-star, who sparked the Dinos with 18 points. Karl Tilleman added 16.

Although he must have been pleased with the point margin, Viking coach Ken Shields didn't think too much of the shooting by either side.

The Vikes shot 44 per cent from the field and 82 per cent from the line while Calgary made only 36 per cent from the field and 69 per cent from the line.

"It just didn't seem like playoff basketball," Shields said after the game.

The best-of-three series continues tonight at 8 in the McKinnon and a third game, if it's needed, will be played Sunday at 2 p.m.

Winner of the playoff advances to the Canadian universities championship in Calgary starting next Thursday, but all is not lost for Calgary coach Gary Howard, even if his Dinosaurs are swept out unceremoniously here in two straight games. As host university, they'll get a berth in the nationals, anyway. All a win in the current competition would do is ensure a better place in the draw.

Should the Vikings lose the best-of-three series, however, they could pick up one of two wild card berths. But they might not.

This time last year, Ken Shields' Vikings ousted the Dinosaurs in two straight games and were runners-up in the national tourney. But two years ago, after cruising to a win in the playoff series opener, the Vikes were shocked by Calgary in the second game and needed a win in the decider on the Sunday to take the title.

And is Shields worried that complacency might set in and Calgary just might pull the same trick by winning the second game tonight?

"I don't think the boys really want to play on Sunday . . . so I think we'll be all right!"

Gowsell's partners want to be serious

CALGARY (CP) — Alberta third Neil Houston said it was time to get serious in the Canadian men's curling championship.

Paul Gowsell and his Calgary team-mates planned no hijinks Friday after losing two consecutive games and dropping into a second-place tie with Northern Ontario at the conclusion of the round-robin affair.

"We've never lost three games in a row before as a team," Houston said.

"That Manitoba party was pretty good but we're used to that (late nights)."

The Gowsell rebels, who got kicked out of the host motel when they won the A event in the Alberta playoffs, couldn't do anything right in the final two draws of the 51st championship, while Saskatchewan's Rick Folk of Saskatoon vaulted into first place with double victories.

The Labatt Brier began its three-rink playoffs today with Alberta and Al Hackner's Thunder Bay entry meeting in a semi-final game. The winner will meet Folk in the final at noon Sunday.

Surprises by rinks from Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Quebec highlighted the final draws at the Stampede Corral.

In the 14th round, Peter Hope of Dartmouth, N.S., stole one in the 10th end to beat Gowsell 5-4, while Newfoundland skip Wayne Hamilton of St. John's downed Russ Howard of Penetanguishene, Ont., 10-7 and Ted MacFadyen of Crapaud, P.E.I., scored two in the 10th and one in the 11th to shade Jim Ursel of Montreal 6-5.

Manitoba's Earle Morris of Winnipeg beat Richard Belyea of Saint John, N.B., 8-6, and Folk trimmed Tim Horrigan of Victoria 7-2 in other games. Horrigan's rink wound up at 5-6.

Laurie's day

Times News Services

It was just another run down his home course for Ken Read, but for Laurie Graham it was a special afternoon at the Canadian downhill ski championships at Lake Louise, Alta.

Graham, 19, of Inglewood, Ont., won her first national senior individual championship Friday by beating runner-up Kathy Kreiner and 25 others to win the women's title.

Graham raced down the 2,780-metre course in one minute 42.60 seconds, nearly a full second faster than Kreiner, the former Olympic gold medallist from Timmins, Ont.

Calgary's Read, 24, shook off his disappointment from Tuesday, when he missed his chance to win the World Cup title. On Friday, he won his fifth consecutive Canadian crown.

He raced down the 3,512-metre course in 1:47.80. Fellow national team member Steve Podborski of Toronto finished second in 1:48.14. Dave Murray of Abbotsford was third.

Andreas Wenzel of Liechtenstein won a men's giant slalom race in West Germany with a combined time of two minutes 14.93 seconds for two runs. Canucks fall victim to happy travellers

Times News Services

The more Atlanta Flames get to know each other, the better they seem to play, especially during National Hockey League road games.

Atlanta scored five unanswered goals in the third period Friday when they blitzed Vancouver Canucks 9-3, giving Atlanta six wins and two ties in the Flames' last 10 games away from home.

"We're a much happier team lately and that makes it easier to play together as a team,'' said two-goal scorer Bob MacMillan. "A few wins of the road in the last month has given us confidence again in ourselves, something we were lacking earlier.''

A big reason for the recent success of the Flames, now .500 on the road this season, has been the inspired play of MacMillan's line. Centre Guy Chouinard, like MacMillan, had two goals in the third period against the Canucks and left winger Eric Vail scored in the first period. Vail also had three assists in the last period.

The trio accounted for 122 goals last season, but started slowly this year after an injury sidelined MacMillan. Chouinard now has 27 goals, Vail 24 and MacMillan 14.

Rookie Pat Riggin played goal for the Flames — U.S. Olympic hero Jim Craig, hit with influenza, was sent home to rest — and came up with numerous key saves in the second period when Vancouver outshot Atlanta 17-20. The Canucks had 33 shots over the game on Riggin, while the Flames directed 29 at Canuck goaltenders Gary Bromley and Glen Hanlon.

Hanlon replaced Bromley at the start of the second period with the Flames leading 2-1 and Vancouver quickly took a 3-2 lead on Stan Smyl's second and third goals of the game. Atlanta came back, however, and Hanlon was caught out of position on three of the five third period Atlanta goals.

"We went to the outhouse in the third and didn't come back,'' said Vancouver coach Harry Neale.

In Friday's only other game, it was Doug Lecuyer's goal which proved to be the game-winner in Chicago Black Hawks' 4-2 victory over Colorado Rockies, both coaches agreed the difference in the game was the play of backup goaltender Mike Veisor.

"Veisor stole it from us,'' said Colorado coach Don Cherry.

Chicago has won 10 and tied two of its last 15 outings, and has a 3-0-1 record on its current road trip.

Rushcall gets silver medal

QUEBEC — Janet Rushcall was the University of Victoria's only medal-collecter in six events run off Friday in the Canadian Inter-University Athletic Union's swimming championships here.

Rushcall won a silver medal with a second-place finish in the women's 400-metre freestyle. Her time was 4:26.88, four-fifths of a second behind the winner, Susan Mason of Dalhousie.

No time to ease up says Cougar coach

Victoria hasn't lost a Western Hockey League game to New Westminster in 13 straight meetings but the Bruins, and some of his own squad's recent inconsistencies, still worry Cougar coach Jack Shupe.

"These are the games we have to win,'' said Shupe as Cougars prepared for a home-and-home series this weekend, "if we're going to catch Portland.''

Cougars and Bruins face off in Memorial Arena tonight and again Sunday in New Westminster. And the Bruins, fresh off Friday's 6-1 victory over Saskatoon Blades, would enjoy playing the spoiler's role.

Cougars trail the Western Division-leading Winter Hawks by five points but have four games in hand.

Anthony McMurchy sparked the Bruins Friday with four goals, boosting his individual total to 41.

In other games, Regina Pats scored a club-record 43rd victory by edging Brandon Wheat Kings 5-4 while in Lethbridge, the Broncos ended a nine-game losing streak by upsetting Calgary Wranglers 4-3.

Wranglers played with coach Doug Sauter absent from the bench. He was suspended one game by Del Wilson, the league's referee-in-chief, for failing to control his players in a Thursday game in Medicine Hat.

Cowichan girls move into final

Times News Services

Cheryl Kelsey scored 38 points Friday to lead Killarney Cougars to a 72-63 victory over Salmon Arm Jewels and a berth in tonight's final in the B.C. girls high school basketball tournament at Vancouver.

Kelsey now has scored 122 points in three games.

Cougars meet Cowichan Thunderettes in the title game. Cowichan, with a 43-1 record this year, advanced by beating Prince of Wales 53-47.

Foul trouble and 22 points by Tracy Gelsinger helped Killarney end the Jewels' quest for their fifth consecutive title.

Cowichan built a 39-22 halftime lead, allowed Prince of Wales to get as close as 49-45 before closing out the victory.

Oak Bay, Lansdowne, Quamichan and John Barsby of Nanaimo scored victories Friday in Duncan to advance to the semifinals of the Vancouver Island junior high boys' tournament. Oak Bay clipped Campbell River 63-58, Lansdowne stopped A.W. Neill of Port Alberni 65-58, Nanaimo beat Colquitz 60-48 and Quamichan defeated Belmont 68-55 in first-round action.

At Hope, Burnaby Alpha clipped Delta 51-43 and Hope edged Summerland 62-57 to move into today's final for the B.C. "A'' boys' championship. St. Michael's University of Victoria beat Grand Forks 52-44 in a consolation game.

Defending champion Nicolett Inn of Winnipeg and B.C.'s Fraser Valley Bullets squeezed into the playoff round, then upset unbeaten teams to qualify for today's final in the Canadian senior men's championships at Edmonton.

Nicolett Inn, which finished preliminary play with a 2-1 record, eliminated the 4-0 Edmonton Express 79-62. Fraser Valley, with a 2-2 record in preliminaries, dumped 3-0 Calgary Sky Kings 86-63 to earn its berth in the final.

"We came here to win the tournament, not to please anybody,'' said B.C. centre Ken MacKenzie, reacting to allegations from the host team that in the B.C.-Edmonton game Thursday, Bullets intentionally lost to avoid meeting Manitoba in the semi-final.

Bill Robinson of Chemainus scored 16 points and Ken and Brian MacKenzie, the latter a pickup from Victoria DataTech, each had 14 in B.C.'s win.

Jim Lamont's 1,061 series highlights awards collection

Lora Tuthill, Bernie Nichols, Jim Lamont and Beth Arnold picked off the 20th week's honors in the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition.

Tuthill broke loose with two "firsts" and Nichols chalked up a sizzling series to claim the tenpin awards.

Lora, whose average was only 120, recorded her first 200 game and first 500 series while heading up the women's division with a powerful 207-208-180 — 595 effort in the Allstars Kingpinners League. Bernie captured men's laurels with a 234-244-208 — 686 series in the Victoria Senior League.

Lamont came up with the highest series so far this season on Vancouver Island and Arnold rolled a powerful middle game to collect the fivepin awards.

Jim rolled a 383-285-393 — 1,061 series in the Sunday Classic League at Chemainus Bowlarena to claim men's laurels. Ron Andrew of Victoria rolled a 1,039 series — the only other over-1,000 effort this season — to win honors during the previous week.

Beth topped the women's division with a 219-334-233 — 786 series in the Breakfast League at Town and Country Lanes.

Before the judge

An 18-year-old who telephoned a bomb threat last November to Reynolds high school was given a conditional discharge in provincial court Friday, but was ordered to perform 150 hours of community service work.

Timothy John Steed, 135 Linden, pleaded guilty last month to "wilfully interrupting and interfering with the lawful use and enjoyment of Reynolds senior secondary" at 3963 Borden on Nov. 23.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said the call was received at 1:25 p.m. by a school secretary. The caller said: "There's a bomb in the science room."

B.C. Telephone Co. security men traced the call to a house at 3935 Winton where a youth, questioned by Saanich police, said Steed made the call.

Steed admitted making the call as a prank.

Defence lawyer Steven Kelliher said Steed, a Victoria High student, went to the Winton Street address to have lunch with some friends from Reynolds. The Reynolds students, Kelliher said, decided Steed should make the call.

Kelliher also informed the court there have been at least three other telephoned bomb threats to Reynolds in the last 10 years.

Before granting the discharge, Judge William Ostler said the bomb scare syndrome is increasing in the western hemisphere.

A 19-year-old on two sets of probation was given a three-month jail sentence for stealing licence plates.

Mark Stanley, no fixed address, pleaded guilty to theft under $200 and a charge of possession of stolen property was withdrawn.

Court was told Stanley was stopped Feb. 29 by Saanich police at 1 a.m. in a Lincoln parked at Nelthorpe and Graythorpe. Stanley told officers a man named Cliff Edwards gave him permission to use the car.

A check showed the licence plates had been stolen from a parked Toyota two days before.

Stanley was convicted exactly one year ago Friday of three counts of fraud and received a $100 fine and a year's probation. He was also convicted March 9, 1979, of failing to appear in court and fined $50, and on Dec. 4, 1979, of theft over $200 and possession of stolen property and given another suspended sentence and two years probation.

Ostler said he would recommend Stanley's sentence be served in a forestry camp setting.

Two 23-year-old men were charged with being unlawfully at large from the Jordan River forestry camp on Monday.

Frank Roland Jeffrey and James Melvin Smart, both serving prison terms, requested and received a remand until March 20 so they could obtain legal counsel.

Having $3,500 in stolen property from the Saanich municipal yard at 1040 McKenzie resulted in a $400 fine for Peter King Wong, 23, of 3967 Arlene Place.

Wong pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property and was placed on six months probation.

Wong and two juveniles went to the yard Jan. 20 and took three radio microphones, three mobile radios, three aerial coils, two fire extinguishers, and a flashing roof lamp between 12:30 and 3 a.m.

A 30-day jail term was imposed on a 48-year-old man who pleaded guilty to his sixth drinking-driving conviction.

Warren John Greenlaw, 85 Battleford, was caught Jan. 26 driving with a blood-alcohol reading over .08.

Laughton said Sidney RCMP were called by B.C. Ferries authorities who were having trouble with a van driver in the Swartz Bay terminal lot. When police arrived, they saw Greenlaw's van straddling two lanes, and officers had to assist Greenlaw out of his vehicle.

Ostler placed Greenlaw on a year's probation and banned him from driving for one year.

Fined for drinking-driving convictions were: David Michael Moore, 45, of 722 Cordova Bay, $450; Vicky Lenore Blevins, 20, of 614 Baxter, $400; and Paul Eric Penner, 20, of 1034 Dunsmuir, $400.

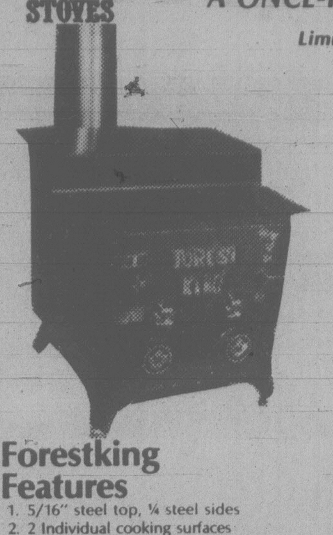
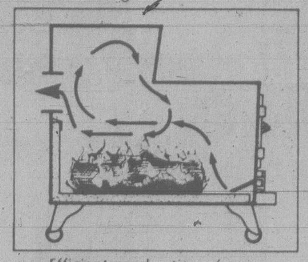
THE MODERN PIONEER



Facts about the Forestking.
The Forestking is constructed of heavy ¼" and 5/16" hot-rolled steel plate. Steel plate is denser, more pliable, and longer lasting than the cast iron stoves of yesterday. The Forestking weighs 360 lbs. (163 kg) providing an excellent radiant mass.
The two step burn system recycles hot gases within the stove, providing more efficient heating.



Efficient combustion of gases
An asbestos seal around the door makes the Forestking virtually airtight. The Forestking holds fire up to 8-12 hrs. and has a heating capacity of up to 2000 sq. ft. (185 sq. meters). No grate is required, as air is drawn from lower front of stove to provide an efficient burn. The Forestking burns either wood or coal and will handle logs up to 22" in length. Adjustable leg balls allow easy levelling.

Sheila's queen of snooker

Sheila King: the time is ripe for women snooker players

TORONTO (CP) — After the morning dishes are stacked and the apartment tidied, Sheila King's time is her own. That's when she sits back and thinks about Little Joe Davis, Fast Eddie, Fats and Wee Willie. Although they sound like unsavoury characters, Miss King says they have as much class as royalty.

They're the great names of snooker, a game Miss King has mastered in only five years. She is undoubtedly the best female player in Toronto, still considered the shrine of the Canadian game.

Miss King, 28, a former city champ and national finalist, is campaigning to become Canada's first lady of snooker, travelling from the Atlantic to the Pacific to play with and observe the best.

She says snooker is tailor-made for the female touch because strength — the cornerstone of the male's superiority complex in sports — is irrelevant to the game.

"Physically, a woman is no match for a man, so all through the centuries we have had to survive with our wits," she said in an interview. "We have been well-trained to play this game."

At first glance, snooker looks simple enough. There are 22 balls on a rectangular felt table — a white or cue ball, 15 reds and individual black, yellow, green, brown, blue and pink balls.

The object is to propel the white ball to deposit the red balls into one of six pockets on the table. Sinking a red ball entitles the shooter to try for other coloured balls, each of which has a higher value.

The score for a perfect game is 147. Although the best King has done is 86, she points out that even the famous George Chenier, who spent his whole life playing snooker and was one of the world's best players, never had a perfect score.

Miss King's love affair with the game began when her boy-friend was preparing for the British Columbia amateur championship. Since he had to practise constantly, the only time she saw him was when he held a cue stick in his hands.

Her interest piqued, she watched for helpful hints and within a year had become an expert. Now she teaches others what she has learned in a $45 eight-part course sponsored by the YWCA.

And now, she thinks the time is ripe for female snooker payers.

"See, there's not that many women playing so the competition isn't as stiff as for a man. If a woman took up this game today and really applied herself she could make the Canadian championships in a year or two.

"She might lose in the first round but she could get there and that in itself is a great accomplishment."

abby

I've been reading your column for 23 years, and have always thought you were fair and intelligent, but when you said that the parents who smoked marijuana in front of their four-year-old child were guilty of "child abuse," I couldn't believe my eyes!

I am a 37-year-old housewife married to a psychologist. We have four teenagers.

My husband and I do not drink, but we do smoke marijuana. We have smoked it for over 20 years (nearly every day), and we've never hidden the fact from our children. We do not allow our children to drink, or to associate with people who do, but there is nothing wrong with pot.

In case you didn't know it, pot is legal in Alaska. Are all Alaskans guilty of child abuse?

Alaskans are allowed to grow their own for consumption.

I think you are guilty of column abuse! Please get the facts, Abby!

Informed

Dear Informed:

I did: Marijuana is no more "legal" in Alaska than it is in any other state of the United States. It is decriminalized (under Statute No. 17.12.110.) Some of the restrictions are: Nobody under 18 years of age can possess or use marijuana. If over 18, a person may not have more than one ounce on his person in public (this means on public streets, sidewalks, buildings, buses, etc.). He may not use marijuana while operating a motor vehicle, airplane, etc. If convicted it would be a misdemeanor with a fine of not more than $1,000.

Marijuana may be used in private by those who are 18 or older.

Nothing is said about the legality of growing marijuana for one's own use.

Dear Abby:

I was glad to see your warning about angel dust. Everything you said about it was true. It makes you violent, and can really mess up your head I know. I was in high school, ready to graduate, when I smoked that dust. I didn't even know it. I smoked some pot that had been laced with angel dust. I didn't get high. I just went crazy.

I was sent to a mental hospital where I spent three months. I put my poor parents through hell. I'm out now, but I have to see a social worker every week. I'm still on medication, and my head still hurts. But at least I can dress myself and comb my own hair. My biggest fear is that one day I will go completely crazy again and end up back in the hospital. I saw kids who'd had that experience.

My God, what a terrible price to pay for wanting to get high! Abby, please keep telling kids to stay away from pot. You never know what's in it. I am signing my name and address just to prove this letter is not a phony, but if you print it, sign me ...

Paid a Big Price

Dear Paid:

If your letter makes just one person say no to pot, it will have been worth space in my column. Thanks for writing. God bless.

Dear Abby:

Do I need a nose job? Many of my friends think I do, but my nose has never bothered me. It's big, but it's not a real schnozzola like some I've seen.

An aunt even offered to treat me to a nose job when I graduated from high school, but I never took her up on it. People I hardly know have asked me how come I never did something about my nose. It must be pretty bad, but I never thought it was.

I honestly don't think I should fool around with the nose that God gave me, but then people never see themselves as others see them.

I am enclosing my picture. What do you think, Abby?

Nose Trouble

Dear Nose:

It matters not what I think, or what anyone else thinks, what counts is what you think! As long as it doesn't bother you (and it runs all right), leave it alone.

Abby would love to hear from you. Send your letter (plus self-addressed stamped envelope) to her c/o Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

An angel of mercy to broken dolls

By SUE VOYLES

RUBY, Mich. (AP) — Theresa Eveningred is a little girl at heart.

As proof, the 55-year-old woman has about 400 dolls scattered throughout her home.

There are no valuable antiques among her collection. Instead, the majority of Mrs. Eveningred's dolls need new hair, a facelift, or even an arm or a leg.

But all of them are scrubbed and dressed in Eveningred originals before being sent home with some little boy or girl.

"I'm a pushover for kids," she says. "I fix up the old dolls so they are ready to be loved again."

The doll lady — called Aunt Tess by neighborhood children — has a regular clientele consisting of youngsters in this community of about 1,000 located 50 kilometres west of Port Huron.

"They bring them (dolls) to me in paper bags," she says. "An eye will be missing and an arm or leg will be off."

But Mrs. Eveningred does not restrict herself to repairing and dressing dolls. She also knits dolls that are stuffed with soft material.

"I can't see a little kid going to bed with a mechanical doll or even a plastic doll," she says.

A dressmaker for many years, her involement with dolls started about 10 years ago when she picked one up at a rummage sale after it reminded her of a friend. Since then, she's spent hundreds of hours making painstaking repairs to hundreds of dolls.

Mrs. Eveningred recalls that as a child she wanted a Shirley Temple doll, but the toy was too expensive for her family, which was struggling during the Depressing.

"That was the only thing I wanted," she says. "I never had a doll."

Three years ago, she finally got her Shirley Temple doll. But she did so only after finding replacement parts and recreating the doll.

Mrs. Eveningred says she doesn't make much money in her doll-making — just enough for yarn and other materials to keep the home factory going.

In addition, she cultivates many different sources in getting materials for her dolls.

"I have connections you wouldn't believe," she says. "I have grandmothers who save me their lace and buttons, and Goodwill is getting so they know me over there."

Suntan parlors perilous things

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

A new shop has opened in our community. Many teen-agers from the high school where I teach flock to it to get an artificial suntan. I don't know how well this tanning shop is supervised. With the little I do know about sunlamp tanning, it strikes me that this could possibly be dangerous to the children. So far I have not been able to enlist any city agency to investigate. Do you think this is safe?

Miss R.E.F.

Dear Miss F.:

Suntanning shops seem to be springing up in many areas of the country.

Overexposure to ultraviolet light can turn out to be a real threat the health. For years, physicians and skin specialists have been warning the public that overexposure to sunlight can be harmful to the skin. Many susceptible people have developed skin cancers as a result of this exposure.

Sunlamp tanning can be even more injurious because of the concentrated attack by ultraviolet radiation. Unless there is extreme care used in building up the exposure from a minimal dose, severe burns of the skin may result. Danger to the eyes is particularly important, for unless the eyes are carefully shielded, burns of the cornea may result.

Another potential hazard of overexposure to the sunlamp is the fact that there are definite medical conditions which can be aggravated by exposure to ultraviolet light.

Blond and red-haired people, with fair skins, when subjected to sunlamp tanning, can develop severe burns without any evidence of tanning.

Some drugs, especially water pills and antibiotics, may make the skin more sensitive to ultraviolet light and produce unwanted reactions.

Unless there are extremely rigid and well-established precautions, with careful supervision, and medical permission, there is potential danger in this artificial suntanning craze. I am certain that there must be city and state health agencies who can be enlisted in your effort to explore this and to establish rigid rules for safety.

Dear Doctor:

I expect to have a hysterectomy operation in the next two years. My sister had the same thing and developed adhesions. Could this be a family tendency?

Mrs. J.V.

Dear Mrs. V.:

Adhesions are firm bands of fibrous tissue that sometimes occur following abdominal surgery. It is not generally accepted that there is any hereditary tendency in the formation of adhesions.

The refinements and the techniques of modern surgery have greatly reduced the chances of adhesions.

Dr. Coleman welcomes letters from Times readers. Personal replies, however, are not possible — and only topics of broadest general interest will be referred to. Write c/o Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Mad snipper strikes again

Soehnlen in restaurant with his 'trophies'

EAST SPARTA, Ohio (AP) — Lee Soehnlen hates neckties. Walk in his steakhouse wearing one and before you know it — SNIP!

Since his days back in a parochial high school, Soehnlen has hated ties. Too formal, he would grumble 20 years ago while wrapping them around his neck. Still too formal, he says now to customers at his Ohio steakhouse.

"You can't relax and feel casual with a tie," said Soehnlen. "So we don't allow them here."

Customers know they'd better heed his words. Before entering the dining room, they are urged to remove their ties, Soehnlen said. If the ties don't come off and the customers are determined to stay, the waitresses cut them off.

The new trophies are then added to the collection of about 2,000 ties adorning the ceiling of the Bear Creek Steak House.

Most customers know about the unusual rule, which Soehnlen began enforcing shortly after the restaurant opened 10 years ago. As a result, many wear homemade oversized varieties or none at all.

But some unsuspecting souls always show up while others are brought in by their friends who know about the requirement.

That's when the fun begins.

"There's been guys who have refused to take off their tie," Soehnlen said. "So we refuse to serve them and ask them to leave. When they get up to go, the crowd boos and claps and hollers."

Some customers who have challenged Soehnlen's scissors and lost threaten legal action unless their ties are replaced, he said. But so far, no suits have been filed. And only one tie has been replaced.

That was only because the man — unaware of the rule — had just received his tie as a birthday present from his wife and son.

Sometimes, Soehnlen admits, the customers strike back. Like the man who wore a steel tie. Or another whose tie, like a magician's handkerchief, just kept coming off, tie after tie.

One of the easiest and least expensive house plants to start from seed is the coleus, says a horticulturist. His directions: Put about an inch of potting soil in a glass jar or plastic bag. Sprinkle seeds over soil, seal the jar and place it in a shady window. When seedlings have two sets of leaves, transplant to small, individual pots. Hold each seedling by its leaves; crushing the stem kills the plant.

Rearranging the furniture into new conversation groupings or new traffic patterns is the least expensive way to achieve a new atmosphere for any room. Other decorator tips: Tie draperies back with roping or ribbon. Clear all clutter from tabletops and put back only a minimum of useful accessories. Mix up furniture from other rooms. Add a mirror to a coffee table . . . and, you didn't spend a cent.

Food for thought: Check the price on a 12-oz. carton of cottage cheese before selecting the 24-oz. carton. It happens frequently that two smaller cartons cost less than one large carton. Watch for "specials" on processed tomatoes; growers and canners have large inventories.

Ain't easy for girl named Ralph

EDMONTON (CP) — You've heard of the boy named Sue. Well, Edmonton has a girl named Ralph.

Her name is Ralph Sneed. And she agrees with the line in the song by Johnny Cash: Life ain't easy for a boy named Sue — or in her case, a girl named Ralph.

Ralph is the name her mother had settled on for her fourth child.

It didn't matter that the child was a girl. Ralph was the name her mother liked.

But for Mrs. Sneed, the name Ralph has meant problem after problem.

"I've had had a lot of hard times with this name."

Convincing people that her name is indeed Ralph is the biggest and most common problem, she said.

Ralph! How come?

Mistrustful bank tellers figure prominently in her reminiscences about her unusual first name. They tell her that must be her husband's name, and ask her to sign her own name.

Her husband, who died in 1962, was named Eugene — Gene for short. So in conversation or over the telephone, Gene and Ralph sounded like a run-of-the-mill couple, Mrs. Sneed laughed.

Unlike the boy named Sue, Mrs. Sneed's classmates didn't give her a tough time about her name.

But as a mother named Ralph, Mrs. Sneed ran into a bit of teasing from doctors and nurses when she registered her children.

Jiffy-Lace: think big

Just recently there has been a renewed interest in Jiffy-Lace which is a combination of both knit and crochet. It has been popular in the U.S. for some time, but there are very few patterns in Canada.

There is one basic stitch, which is quite simple to work. It works up quite quickly once you have the hang of it, and can be used for any weight of wool, depending on the effect you want to achieve.

Back in the late 1960s there was a craze on for knitting with extremely large needles. I understand the first person who thought of knitting with these outrageously large needles, did in fact sharpen the ends of broomsticks!

You will need some double knitting weight of wool and a medium-to-large, but not excessively large crochet hook, a 3.50 or 4.00 mm should do, to make a test swatch.

Make a chain of twenty stitches using the crochet hook. Pull the last loop up and place it on one of the jumbo knitting needles which is being held in the left hand. Now insert the hook into each of the chain in turn, pulling through the loop and placing it on the jumbo knitting needle, so that at the end of the chain, you will have twenty loops or stitches on the needle.

The crochet hook is used again on the next row. Insert the hook into the centre of the first five stitches (as you would if you were knitting them together), and holding these loops together as one, yarn over hook and pull through loops, letting the loops slide off the knitting needle, one chain.

Now into the centre of the one chain which gathered the five loops together; work five single crochet. Work each set of five loops on the jumbo needle in same way across the row, but do not turn. Pull up the last loop on crochet hook onto the jumbo needle again, now working into the back loops only of the single crochet of previous row, pull yarn through and place loops onto the knitting needle. You will again have twenty loops on the needle. Now repeat the crochet off row again.

You can vary the number of loops you draw together with the crochet hook, bearing in mind that these will have to be replaced with the same number of single crochet.

You can obtain a very lacey effect with this stitch by using a fine yarn for a baby's shawl of stole or scarf, or a mediun to heavy yarn for an adult shawl or afghan.

Another good feature of this stitch is that it is possible to use a different color for each row to follow a color scheme, or to use up oddments of wool on hand.

This week's pattern is a delightful dress and jacket for the young miss of one year! A full lacey stitch skirt sets off the stocking stitch bodice and puff sleeves, while the little jacket has the wide deep sleeves which is so easy to slip on. Cure for gulping dog: rocks in food

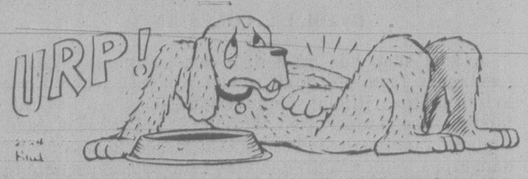
By DR. FRANK MILLER



Dear Dr. Miller: Handy, my hound, is a gulper. He practically inhales his food in a few seconds. Then he sits around with this pained look on his face and burps a few times. Sometimes he even throws up the food and re-eats it. Is there any way I can slow down his eating so that he doesn't get this indigestion? I've had him checked for worms and other things like that and he's OK. — E.B.

Dear E.B.: First you could try a Handy handout of say ten per cent of his food. Then wait half an hour before giving him the balance. This "pre-meal" may inhibit the appetite sufficiently to slow him down a little. A second approach is simply to divide his daily rations into thirds. These smaller spaced meals should prove easier for his stomach to cope with. Finally, you can increase the time it takes him to get his meal down by (a) placing several large stones in his food dish so that he has to eat around them to get his food and/or (b) feed a dry kibbled dog food which he may be forced to chew partially in order to get it swallowed.

Dear Dr. Miller: I'd like to get a parrot as a pet, but my mother warns me about the danger of tuberculosis from these birds. Is TB in parrots a real threat? I personally have never heard of it. — M.McT.

Dear M.McT.: Parrots are susceptible, can carry and transmit TB from birds, cattle, or humans. A parrot could in fact be a carrier even though it did not appear to be actually ill. Obviously a parrot could not get TB unless it was exposed to the disease in the first place. Certainly, most parrots do not have TB, but it's prudent to pick a healthy young bird to begin with and then have a local bird-oriented veterinarian confirm your choice.

Dear Dr. Miller: Was my friend putting me on when she told me the doctor gave her turtle an enema?! She seemed kind of put out when I didn't believe her, but I still don't know if she was pulling my leg.— E.C.

Dear E.C.: Can't say whether your friend's turtle was constipated in the first place or whether her veterinarian gave it an enema to solve that problem in the second place. Since constipation can occur in turtles and enemas can be effective in relieving the condition, the enema event could certainly have occurred. . .

Dear Dr. Miller: I'm considering taking my Persian with me on a plane trip, but Poo would have to stay in one of those very low carriers that slide under the seat. They won't let me bring her out in my lap; she has to stay in that carrier all the way. Is that safe? Would she get too cold in there? — K.F.

Dear K.F.: Those underseat cat carriers work reasonably well for healthy cats, though a few flying felines do better when traveling tranquilized. As far as your Persian Poo becoming cold is concerned, it's unlikely. Actually, a long-haired cat in such close confinement would be more likely to overheat.

Sue new station master

TOKYO (AP) — Sue Kikkawa, a 35-year veteran of Japan's national railways, was appointed a station master Friday, the first woman to be given the post.

Kikkawa, 51, whose 62-year-old husband, Eiichi, is a retired locomotive engineer, will head Nogi station on the railway's trunk line in southwestern Honshu, 850 kilometres from Tokyo. About 2,500 daily commuters use the station.

She is one of 6,500 women among the 420,000 employees of the government railways.

30 years later. . .and still blooming gardening

jack beastall

Thirty years ago on March 11, a new feature appeared in this newspaper, a daily column under the title of "The Home Garden."

According to the front page introduction it was to contain "timely hints on what to do each day in the preparation of the garden, selection of seeds, bulbs, shrubs and trees, and the cultivation of crops, for the thousands of gardeners in Victoria and other parts of Vancouver Island."

The title "Home Garden" was chosen because the methods suggested would not conform with the standard practices used in market gardens and on farms where the main object is to produce crops as quickly as possible and market them, making way for more sowings. The more crops an acre of land can produce in a season, the better the financial state of the business.

The home gardener with a small property is not concerned with profits in dollars and cents. The profits from a home garden are pleasure, satisfaction, and relaxation, with a bonus of fresh produce and home decorations from the trees, shrubs and flowers the gardener chooses to grow.

The heading of the first column was "Plan for profit but allow for Pleasure." Although the purpose of having a garden, the layout of a garden, the uses to which a garden is put and the plants that are grown have changed considerably over the past thirty years, the profits and pleasures are still paramount today.

An old Chinese saying was quoted in the first paragraph:

"To be happy for a day, get drunk!
To be happy for a week, get married!
To be happy forever, become a gardener!"

Many readers have found that prevailing happiness in their gardens. Many have turned to gardening to relieve stress and tension.

Other suggestions in that column apply equally to gardening today:

"1. Plan your plantings for a small but continuous supply of vegetables throughout the season and avoid large amounts at one time.

2. When space is at a premium, sow fast-maturing crops between slow growers such as cabbage and parnsnips.

3. Use early, mid-season and late varieties to prolong the season of harvest. Make small sowings every ten to fifteen days using a pinch of seed.

4. Plan the flower beds and borders so that different sections are featured each month and work can be done on areas which have bloomed or will bloom later."

These basic rules are still worth following, although today we stress the "labor-saving" garden, the reduction or elimination of large areas of grass which need continuous attention from March to October, replacing it with plantings of trees and shrubs which will need little care after their early years, and the inclusion of an outdoor living space where all members of the family can indulge in hobbies, games, meals, and rest.

As a result of 20 years research into color and its effects on the human mind, the continuous showing of mixed colors in herbacious borders is no longer considered good planning, nor is the use of mixed colors in beds of annuals and bulbs.

The colors of flowers and the greens of shrubs are now selected to prevent nerve tension which results in arguments, and mental excitement that keeps the body tense. We may soon do as the Japanese have done for a long time, remove all flowers so that the mind can find perfect peace in the garden.

Mention was made in the first column of procrastination being the thief of time, and that gardeners seem to be the greatest procrastinators in the world.

This trait has not changed, for we still put off until next week the things that should be done today possibly because gardening is our hobby, not our livelihood. If we could bring ourselves to take advantage of spare minutes to do small jobs in suitable weather, the garden would not be the problem some believe it to be.

The keeping of a garden notebook was also stressed and is still stressed today.

With written notes on varieties used, planting dates, flowering or picking dates, and the weight of crops or number of flowers picked, the gardener has a reference book that can answer questions better than any outsider.

Some readers have suggested we must get tired of repeating the same things year after year. It is true the columns are repetitious but gardening is also repetitious. These readers may not relize the number of newcomers to this coastal climate each year and their need for first-hand information on conditions and on the care of the hundreds of plants they have never seen before.

Repetitious is correct, but never boring. A letter from one gardener who has found the columns helpful makes the effort satisfying.

In 1950, balcony gardens and allotments had not reached Victoria.

The balcony garden is a miniature garden needing a different approach and different timing to ground level gardening. With the help of advanced balcony gardeners, we have been able to pass along to new apartment owners some hints that make such gardens a profitable and a relaxing pastime.

The difference between an allotment plot and a home garden is mainly the distance from the place of residence and the need for a carefully planned schedule to fit the hours each week that can be spent away from home.

The effort pays the bonus of picnics on the site, open air exercise, new friendships, and an average of $250 worth of nutritious produce at market prices when harvested.

A note was also included in that first column on spring fever: "Gardening fever in spring causes us to plan, and even start, a garden that is impossible to handle as the season advances. Summer holidays, fishing trips, visits by relatives and friends, picnics at the beach, will reduce the amount of time available for gardening. Take all these possibilities into consideration when making your plan.

"Abe Lincoln said: 'I like to see a man who is proud of his place, but I like better to see a place so lived in it seems proud of its owner.' This year plan your garden for profit but allow time for pleasure. Plan it so that you will be proud of it, and it will be proud of you."

We thank our readers for their inspiring letters and hope all of you will be as happy as we are on this our 30th anniversary.

Work for week

Planting of roses, other shrubs, bare-rooted trees, and shrubs growing in containers can be done whenever soil is not saturated. Also the planting of herbaceous perennial divisions or rooted cuttings.

Partial list of flowering shrubs to prune during March: Buddleia davidi, back to two or three side growths of old wood; Erica, summer and fall heathers, snip off all flowered stems; Hydrangea paniculata (PeeGee) and H. arborescens, back to two buds on old wood.

Spartium (Spanish-broom), cut long green shoots back half way to keep a bushy more frost-free plant; Lilac, old shrubs may be cut to half height to recondition; thin out oldest wood remaining. Flowering will be absent for this year, but new growth will soon fill in.

Collect small cans, plastic trays, egg cartons for seed sowing to have young plants ready for putting into garden with their roots undisturbed.

In cold frame, sow few seed of Early Snowball cauliflower; especially good for medium size heads tight curds. Sprouts from old stem.

Incentive scheme eyed for Czechs

PRAGUE (Reuter) — Czechoslovakia will try to improve its sluggish economy by offering more material incentives for productivity and by penalizing inefficiency, the official Ceteka news agency reported.

Ceteka said measures to improve the country's economy were approved by the Communist party presidium and government.

Arson trial opens Tuesday

County court jurors picked Friday to try a Langford man accused of setting a house fire were discharged until next week without having heard any evidence.

Judge Peter Millward was asked to deal with a preliminary matter which will occupy the court Monday. He instructed the jury to reappear Tuesday at 10 a.m.

The seven men and five women will consider evidence against John Burton Davidson, 32, accused of arson in a fire at his mobile home at 133 - 2500 Florence Lake, June 16, 1979.

Richard Law represents the Crown and Malcolm Macaulay is defending Davidson.

Two-ferry service for Quadra Island

One big ferry for the Campbell River-Quadra Island run has been turned down in favor of a second smaller ship between May 15 and Sept. 8.

The Ministry of Transport announcement about the new highways department ferry said the two-ferry service will ease traffic congestion in the summer.

There was speculation in Campbell River that a different, larger ship would be placed on the run, but it was felt two smaller ferries would be a better solution.

Centre sought for deaf in B.C.

The education ministry has appointed a seven-member committee to find a centralized facility for deaf children in B.C.

Education Minister Brian Smith said Friday the committee will make recommendations in August on the best location for a facility and what programs to offer. Briefs from the public will be invited.

Smith said he is not sure the facility at Jericho Hill in Vancouver is the best location to meet the needs of deaf children.

Under examination will be the type of facility, programs to be presented, eligibility, staffing, housing and transportaion.

Named to the committee are Paul Partington of the Greater Vancouver Association of the Deaf, Don McCarthy of the B.C. Deaf Sports Federation, parent Bob Barr, teacher Dale James of Jericho Hill, Mike Hanrahan of the B.C. Cultural Society for the Deaf, Fran Waren of the Jericho Hill School Parents Association and Erik Cardinall of the Western Institute for the Deaf.

New talks for nurses

Mediation efforts to avert a strike by the province's 12,500 registered nurses resume Monday.

Mediator Clarke Gilmour met with the parties last week. The talks were recessed Wednesday.

Further meetings between Gilmour and representatives of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and Health Labor Relations Association are set for Monday to Thursday.

Both parties are observing an information blackout on the talks.

ONLY 7 MORE DAYS TILL TODAY.

And these do it better . . . the Weathergard Inside Sliding Window fits inside from your existing window and requires no costly alterations to your present windows.

It's the dead air space that insulates. You can see by the above illustration that by installing "Weathergard" A on the inside of your existing window B you've created the insulating air space that reduces heat loss by 50%. You can sit by your window without the drafts.

Furnace levels house

RAMA, Sask. (CP) — Edward Yaworski tried to re-light the pilot light on his furnace Thursday and the resulting explosion levelled his new home, left him with minor burns and shattered windows throughout this tiny village, about 170 kilometres northeast of Regina.

Yaworski escaped with first-degree burns to his hands and superficial burns to his face.

But his neighbors next door, Vincent and Annie Diakow, were thrown across their bedroom, slammed into a wall and left unconscious by the blast.

Wagon trip from Texas in trouble

CALGARY (CP) — Organizers of a wagon trek from Texas to Edmonton in honor of Alberta's 75th anniversary have found "slim pickings" among the province's sponsors.,

Of the six covered wagon teams planning to make the 7,500-kilometre trip, only one is sponsored by Albertans.

Rafter Six Guest Ranch of Seebe, Alta., is sponsoring that group and ranch president Stan Cowley is searching for more Alberta support.

Three American sponsors have already committed themselves and two more are waiting in the wings if Albertans don't support the project, said Cowley.

"I guess Americans are more adventurous than Canadians," said Cowley.

Bankruptcies up

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bankruptcies in Manitoba increased 25 per cent in 1979, an independent MLA says.

Sidney Green told the legislature statistics he obtained from the registrar of bankruptcies indicate there were 821 bankruptcies in 1979 compared with 658 in 1978.

So far in 1980, 118 bankruptcies have been filed, he said.

The persistent rise in bankruptcies could be just as telling as the documented rise in mortgage foreclosures, Green said.

Trains improved

SASKATOON (CP) — Canadian National Railways and Via Rail Canada hope to have an improved, experimental dayliner service operating between Prince Albert and Regina by early June, Robert Hail, manager for the project, says.

The service will feature new timetables. Additionally, the northbound dayliner will not delay its evening departure time at Saskatoon if the connecting eastbound transcontinental is late.

Computer bungle

CALGARY (CP) — An estimated 1,000 Calgarians may owe the city an unexpected $100 or so, because city hall's computer goofed.

The machine neglected to put water and sewer charges on some people's bills for as long as six years.

Administrators found out in November, after some customers telephoned to ask why they were not being charged.

Raise in Red Deer

RED DEER (CP) — City councillors have given themselves a 65-per-cent pay increase.

The decision to increase their pay from $5,160 a year to $8,500 was supported by all councillors but opposed by Mayor Ken Curle.

Councillors had already approved a 24-per-cent salary increase for the mayor but appeared to want to put off consideration of their own increase until immediately before the Oct. 15 election.

Women to meet in Nanaimo

For the third time in the history of the Anglican Diocese of B.C., women from throughout the diocese will meet in Nanaimo for the annual conference of Anglican Church Women.

Two Nanaimo groups, one from St. James' and the other from St. Paul's Anglican Church, are responsible for making arrangements for this conference.

Mrs. J. B. Brown, president of the group at St. James,' will be hostess to this large gathering. Mrs. Florence Roberts, president of the group at St. Paul's, will take care of registration, assisted by Mrs. J. S. Clarke.

Delegates will come from Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt, Duncan, Parksville, Port Alberni, Courtenay, Campbell River, Comox, and as far away as Alert Bay for the two-day conference which begins with a service of the Eucharist at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, March 18 at St. James.'

Special greetings will be brought from Nanaimo Mayor Frank Ney, United Church women, Catholic Women, the Council of Women, the Mother's Union and the New Westminster Diocese.

Very Rev. B. W. Whitlow, Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Victoria, administrator to the diocese, will be in attendance, and Mrs. R. R. Gates, diocesan president ACW, will give a special welcome.

Members of the diocesan clergy will be guest speakers and panelists at the meetings. Special guest will be Mrs. Mary Wilkie, Dominion president of the Mothers' Union.

Perspectives

By REV. J.A. DAVIDSON

A cartoon in a magazine shows a man in a psychiatrist's office: "I don't know what I want out of life, doctor," he says, "can you give me an estimate on how much you would charge to find out?"

Many of us can identify with that man. We don't know what we really want out of life, and we have the fear that we'll never discover what it is, no matter how many experts we consult—but, still, it won't do any harm to get a few estimates as to cost. And we continue searching, wondering, hoping.

How can I come to a sense of life's meaning? How can I know peace of mind and heart? How can I get beyond my anxieties and fears and find purpose and joy and serenity?

What has Christian faith to say to the man or woman who asks such questions? Are there resources in it which can help today's despairing person through the bogs of meaninglessness?

It is easy for a Christian preacher to declare that faith makes for the meaningful, joyful life. But it isn't easy to show how faith actually works.

I have learned, both in my work and through my personal experience in faith, that overly simple answers of conventional piety are rarely helpful.

I have learned that faith offers no instant painkillers or tranquillizers. But I have also learned that there are resources in faith which can guide us in our quest for meaning and purpose, which can help us as we struggle for fullness of life.

Fundamental in the Christian understanding of such things is the simple statement in the First Letter to Timothy (1:15): "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

God sent Jesus into our life to save us from our self-centredness and from the evils that come from that. But what does "save" mean? What is "salvation"?

Our English words "save" and "salvation" come from the Latin salus, meaning "healed" or "made whole." In the New Testament the word used for physical health and healing is also used to designate healing from sin, salvation from the self-centredness that alienates us from God and from one another. Salvation, then, is essentially a matter of right relations with God and with other persons, a matter of rising above one's self-centredness.

In the New Testament—the writings of Paul are particularly instructive here—salvation is not seen primarily as an achievement or as a reward. It is always seen as an ongoing process.

It is not a matter of arriving at a terminus; rather, it is a matter of struggling along the road to personal fullness. The only sensible answer a Christian can give to the question, "Have you been saved?", is along these lines: "It is my hope and my prayer that by the grace of God I am being saved day by day." The life of faith is always more an exercise in becoming than a state of being.

The way of salvaton is in what are traditionally called "the means of grace". Through meditative reading of the Bible, the whole Bible but with special attention to the Gospels and the New Testament letters. Through the kind of private prayer that is as much quiet listening as it is speaking to God. Through regular worship within the community of faith, including participation in the Lord's Supper. Through witness to one's faith in world, which includes compassionate service of the needs and sufferings of others.

(Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

Whitlow leaving cathedral post

WHITLOW
. . . end of May

Dean Brian Whitlow of Christ Church Anglican Cathedral has formally announced he intends to retire at the end of May.

In a notice to parishioners, Whitlow said he felt the end of May was "the right" date to resign, after 25 years in the position.

"Our new bishop (Hywel Jones) will be installed on May 1, and my work as diocesan administrator will terminate. I will remain for another month to help him settle in.

"I have spoken with him also about the timing of my retirement and have his agreement."

He said he hoped arrangements could be made for a new dean to arrive in September, ready to take charge of things as the life of the parish quickens in the fall.

In a letter in this month's Diocesan Post, Whitlow opposes the ordination of women priests, saying that the move places "new barriers between Christians."

He said he deeply regretted the ordination of Deborah van der Goes by the bishop of Ruperts Land "when ecumenical relationships are increasingly important."

He noted the move had already caused dissention in the other Catholic churches and added that "what we are doing has placed a new and serious obstacle between our churches."

Parent, teacher session open to all

PARENTS and teachers will meet at Christian Elementary School, 2629 Victor, Saturday, March 15 for a workshop on humanism and Christianity.

Laurain Mills will speak on the subtle influence the philosophy of humanism, with its emphasis on self-fulfilment above obedience to God, has on Christian education in the home and the school.

Mills is an experimental psychologist and has recently returned to Victoria from London, Ont., where she was on the psychology faculty, University of Western Ontario.

The workshop is 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m. Interested persons are asked to notify the school if they will be present for lunch.

Church chronicles

FIRST CONCERT in the Interlude series will be presented at Central Baptist Church, 833 Pandora at 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

Susan Eddlemon, violinist, will be accompanied by Rita Attrot, pianist, and assisted by violist Scott Lewis and cellist Larry Skaggs.

The program will include selections by Saint-Saens, Ravel and Mozart.

Eddlemon is a member of the faculty of Pioneer Music Camp, sponsored by Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. She is also assistant concertmaster of the Victoria Symphony

The Interlude series is presented to raise financial support for deserving young students of music who will attend Pioneer Music Camp this summer. Silver collection will be taken.

A FOLK musical, Lightshine, by Buryl Red will be presented by Garden City Folksingers in Garden City United Church, 4054 Carey Road, tonight and Sunday night at 8 p.m.

Lightshine is a musical interpretation of the Beautitudes. The 24-voice choir under Barbara Johnstone will be accompanied by Art Wright on organ, Mary Iverson on piano, Rob Clark on bass and Stephen Grbvic on drums.

THE VICTORIA presbytery of the United Church is sponsoring a Festival of Faith from Friday at 7 p.m. through 10 p.m. Saturday at Cadboro Bay United. The theme is Telling Their Story—Sharing Their Faith. The festival will include singing, worship, Bible study and a resource centre. Cost including meals is $10. Ask your church office about registration forms.

THE NOON Lenten Forum at St. John's Anglican Church on Quadra Wednesday at 12:10 p.m. features Mrs. Pat Fullerton, director of nursing at Gorge Road Hospital.

As part of the theme of this year's forum, The Whole Person in a Broken World, she will examine the problem of maintaining the wholeness of the person who is institutionalized.

The series is open to all.

Judaism insight film topic

Congregation Temple Emanuel and Victoria Ecumenical Action will co-sponsor a showing of the BBC film The Long Search: The Chosen People at 8 p.m. Thursday, March 13, in Temple Emanuel, Blanshard at Pandora.

The color film seeks to discover insights that Judaism can offer the world in an age of materialism, inflation, nuclear arms and black holes.

Hard life sparked mission

Missionary Martin Middleton III will present a two-day seminar Wednesday and Thursday at Glad Tidings Pentecostal Church, 842 North Park, starting at 7:30 p.m. daily.

Middleton is editor of two monthly newspapers, Little Drummer Boy and the Inner Circle, dedicated to upholding the truth of Jesus Christ.

Raised a summer Catholic and a winter Baptist, Middleton was involved in teenage gang wars, vandalism and the streets until he received a calling seven years ago.

He tells of the school of hard knocks, personified by the Holy Spirit, and has travelled more than a million miles around the world to pass on the message.

Information, phone 478-2609 or 474-2231.

. . . First Quorum

Elder W. Grant Bangerter, a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy, will be the presiding authority at this year's general conference of the Victoria Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormon).

The theme of this year's conference will be Home—The Place To Save Society, with the general public invited to all three sessions.

The first session will start at the chapel, 2990 Quadra, Saturday March 15 at 7 p.m. The second session will begin 9 a.m. Sunday, March 16, at the Chapel. The third session will take place in the new Nanaimo Chapel at 1 p.m., on March 15 at 2424 Glen Eagle.

The 61-year-old Bangerter and his wife, have five sons and five daughters.

He is a graduate of the University of Utah where he also did graduate work. A carpenter and farmer, his business activities have primarily included home building and real estate.

Retreat, revival set

. . . blind musician

A youth retreat, billed as Fork in the Road, and sponsored by Victoria Baptist Church will be held in Victoria March 14 to 16.

A feature of the retreat will be the appearance of Ken Medema, blind pianist-singer-composer from Michigan who has recorded seven albums on the Word label.

The retreat will be followed on March 16 to 19 by a revival crusade. Steve Cloud, pastor of Northwood Baptist Church in West Palm Beach, Fla., will be featured speaker. A deeply commited Christian, Cloud has years of experience in youth ministry.

Medema has been writing and singing his own songs since 1970 when he began composing original music for his work as a music therapist in a psychiatric hospital. He soon found himself writing music reflecting his experience as a Christian and his understanding of the Christian commitment.

His albums vary in musical styles from jazz and blues through hymn arrangements and contemporary Christian to folk, ballad and pop rock.

The theme of the retreat is taken from one of Medema's albums—Fork in the Road. The theme suggests that every decision in life presents a new fork in the road.

Medema will present a special concert at UVic on March 15 at 7:30 p.m.

LOS ANGELES — Once again, Walt Disney Productions is breaking its own self-imposed rules, with the exhilaration of a small-town teen-ager sneaking sips of his father's scotch.

Up to now, Disney movies have always been produced within the company. But now, for the first time in its history, Disney is inviting an independent producer to make a feature Disney movie. Lewis Allen, co-producer of the Broadway musical Annie, and Joseph Strick, producer-director of James Joyce's Ulysses, will make Farley Mowat's Canadian classic Never Cry Wolf for the studio.

Mowat

The $5 million movie, about a young zoologist who goes to the Canadian Arctic to learn why wolves are slaughtering caribou and remains to learn more about himself — and the fact the wolves are eating mice and not slaughtering the herds — will be directed by Carroll Ballard, director of The Black Stallion. The script based on Mowat's book was written by Allen's wife, Jay Presson Allen (Just Tell Me What You Want) and Curtis Hanson.

"On three occasions over the last 10 years, we reached for Never Cry Wolf and it was unavailable to us," said Ronald W. Miller, Disney head of production. "To get the property, I finally made a deal with Lewis Allen. Then I immediately went after Carroll Ballard to direct. Without him, it had a chance of being a typical commercial picture. But with his particular genius, the beautiful stylized look he brings, it can be much more."

The studio's willingness to make such a deal is more evidence of its recent attempts to expand beyond its traditional audience. Until six months ago, the studio had never made a picture that was not G-rated — suitable for general audiences. That means suitable for even the youngest children.

"But even our regular audience is far more sophisticated today than it was 10 years ago," Miller said. "We have a lot of pictures coming up — like Condor Man and The Devil and Max Devlin — which may get PG (parental guidance suggested) ratings for their intensity. It's not our subjects that have changed; it's the intensity. We're going to scare the hell out of them this summer with a sort of horror story, Watcher in the Woods.

So far, the studio's attempts to bring back the teen-agers it lost more than a decade ago, when teen-agers showed notable uninterest in G-rated films, are not completely successful. Midnight Madness — a somewhat sexually suggestive comedy rated PG about a scavenger hunt, which was demolished by the critics — was, Miller said, "a disaster" at the box office.

An even more drastic change from Disney's usual policies is on the horizon. The company has never gone into a joint project with another studio. But three months ago, Disney agreed to jointly finance and distribute two movies with Paramount — Dragon Slayer, a medieval fantasy; and Popeye, the comic-strip being transferred to the screen by Jules Feiffer, cartoonist-screenwriter, Robert Altman, director, and Robin Williams, the comedian, as Popeye.

It was Paramount that sought out Disney for this arrangement. "We distribute Disney movies in Canada," said Barry Diller, Paramount's chairman. "We wanted to find a way to be more in business with them because they do things in a unique way, and over all we want to learn from them. Because of the nature of Dragon Slayer and Popeye, the Disney name will be an advantage. Outside the United States, the Disney name is particularly positive. Also, both of the pictures have merchandising applications, and Disney founded movie merchandising."

NATIONAL BALLET School has chosen nine-year-old Kate Miller of Victoria from among 20 students to attend a six-week summer school session in July. Kate was the only one of 20 students from southern Vancouver Island selected by the NBS audition team. Twenty-seven cities throughout Canada were visited and approximately 600 students were tested for the 60 places available. Of the 60 a possible 30 will be asked to return as full-time students in September. Kate began ballet lessons at the age of four with Bebe Eversfield at the Theatrical Arts Studio. Still studying there she has gained honors in Royal Acadmey of Dance exams. She is the daughter of Geoffrey and Yvonne Miller.

Horsemen read into town

Critics debate and discuss at length the sound-poetry of The Four Horsemen in attempting to define it's true nature. Is it poetry or is it music. Or is it a blend of both?

Whatever, the group's verbal music-visual poetry presentations have made them Canada's leading exponent of the art of sound-poetry.

The Horsemen will be in Victoria this weekend to give one of their reading-performances at Open Space, 510 Fort, Monday at 8 p.m.

Canadian composer Murray Schafer has said of them: "I believe something is happening here that will change the course of modern literature and music too."

Monday's reading is free.

James Reaney, a leading Canadian poet and playwright, is the author of a trilogy of plays concerning the historic incident of the murder of five members of the Donnelly family in Ontario in 1880.

The third play of the trilogy, Handcuffs, has been chosen by Victoria's Phoenix Theatre director Jim Leard as the final production of the 1980 winter season. Handcuffs will open at the theatre, Wednesday and play through March 22 except for March 16.

The Phoenix box office opens Monday.

McPherson Playhouse has a varied banquet of entertainment goodies in the offing, starting Sunday afternoon with the Victoria Musical Art Society's annual showcase of noteworthy young Victoria artists.

Monday night the on-running Bastion Theatre show, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof will be interrupted by the World Adventure Tours three showings of the Doug Jones film, Egypt. Cat ends Saturday and on Sunday March 16, Vancouver's Paula Ross Dancers will offer a program of modern dance.

Next comes the famous Billy Bishop Goes to War, the unique Canadian touring show that this week sent Washington D.C. audiences and critics into orbit. (See Claude Adams Page 35.)

That show is here March 17-19 with a different cast — Cedric Smith and Ross Douglas.

Folk and fun combine at the McPherson Playouse for one night only Monday night, March 31 when Stringband brings its magic mixture of music and humor to Victoria.

Stringband — Bob Bossin, Dennis Nichol, Zeke Mazurek, Marie-Lynn Hammond — have recorded four albums, their latest being The Maple Leaf Dog.

An Evening of Laughter and Tears is the title of a program of readings from Yidish and Jewish literature by distinguished Canadian-born actor Joseph Wiseman. It takes place March 17 at Newcombe Auditorium and is sponsored by Congregation Emmanuel of the Victoria synagogue.

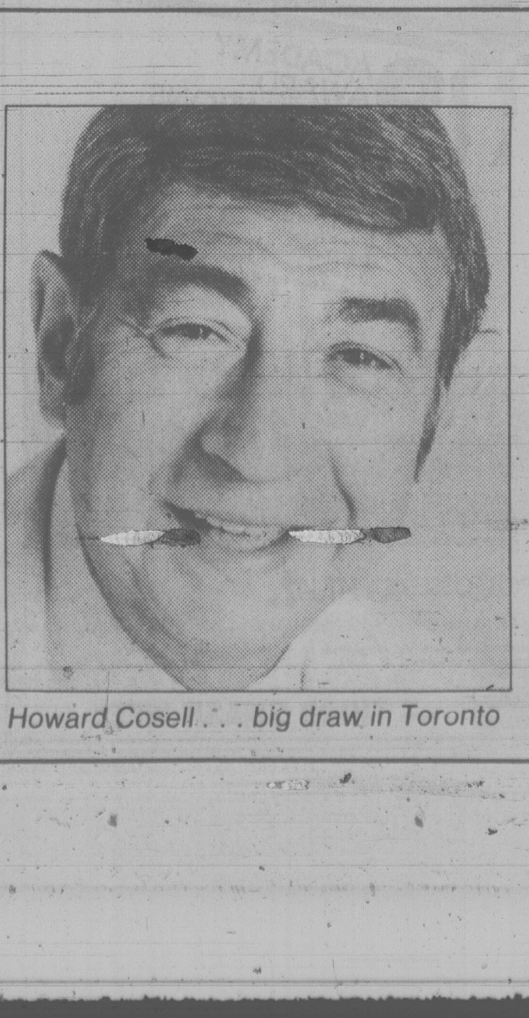
Mackenzie Phillips has been released from her starring role in the CBS-TV comedy series One Day at a Time by mutual agreement because she has outgrown her character of Julie Cooper.

In Italy, unruly rock fans beware. When a mass of youths tried to crash the gate at the latest performance of the popular New Trolls rock group, officials countered with a new method of crowd control — elephants. All the seats were full at the Orfei Circus in Taranto, where the New Trolls were playing, but fans kept trying to get inside. Fed up, the circus owners solved the problem by trotting out two elephants and stationing them in front of the gate.

A gold medal inscribed "John Wayne, American" has been given to the late actor's oldest son. "John Wayne, you have your medal," U.S. Treasury Secretary William Miller declared at the close of a brief ceremony under the rim of the Capitol dome in Washington. The medal, which Congress ordered struck in Wayne's honor shortly before his death last year, was received for him by Michael Wayne of Batjac, a film company which the elder Wayne founded. Kenneth Taylor, the Canadian diplomat who masterminded the successful escape of six Americans from Iran late in January, will also have a gold medal struck in his honor — the first Canadian ever honored this way by the U.S.



Howard Cosell . . . big draw in Toronto

The Canadian Cancer Society scored big in Toronto, netting $110,000 over lunch with a little help from ABC-TV sportscaster Howard Cosell and some of Canada's top athletes. Cosell provided the play-by-play during a fashion show with the theme Frocks and Jocks attended by about 1,100 people.

Timothy Leary, the drug-culture guru of the 1960s, is making rounds on the nightclub circuit these days, expounding a philosophy of "self-confidence, self-sufficiency, self-respect and self-indulgence." "My job is to preach disrespect for society," Leary told about 200 youthful customers who paid $3.75 admission charge for his act at an East Lansing, Mich., club one night this week. Today's young people, said the 59-year-old Leary, should "avoid terminal adulthood."

Praised for his success in the black community, Motown Industries chairman Berry Gordy received the eighth annual Whitney M. Young award from the U.S. National Urban League. About 1,600 people attended a $150-a-plate dinner to see Gordy receive the award in Los Angeles.

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

Vancouver musicians released more records on independent labels in 1979 than any other city in North America. Impressive? Yes — when you consider the implications. Vancouver must have a lot of bands, and these bands must have a very strong following. Also important is the fact that these independent releases make great demos and their relative success or failure will help the record company executives decide which bands are worth signing.

Vancouver has always been a strongly blues-orientated city and many of these releases are blues-based.

The four records we look at today show some of the different directions that Vancouver bands have taken the blues.

The best of the four albums is the debut by 6 Cylinder with the album of the same name. It is a great album. The group take the blues and add on nearly every musical style of this century, and the formula works. The opening cut, Beyond Hope (B.C.), has a clarinet that adds a strong dixieland swing. The next track, Teresa, starts with a 50's rockabilly sound complete with honky-tonk piano — then in the middle of the song there is an instrumental break that is definitely 70's style rock. The song's end combines 25 years of rock evolution in less than five minutes. Every radio station should be playing this song.

The album continues on mixing styles with fiddle for country effect and sax for jazz feel. It is a credit to the ability of the musicians that they can mix so many styles without producing mush — they know their influences. Clear, crisp production helps to bring out the solos with just a touch of echo to achieve depth of sound.

In runner-up spot is Uncut by Powder Blues. This is Chicago-style blues with lots of trumpet and sax and strong rhythm. Most of the material is written by the band and is self-descriptive — like "Many more nightclubs and I'm gonna need my head shrunk" and "Doing it right, on the wrong side of town". Powder Blues is a bar-room dance band and this is a dance album. The band recorded what they do best and have achieved success on that level as the first pressings of the album have already sold out. The only difference between this album and 6 Cylinder album is that 6 Cylinder has more variety and leaves more room for progress. I can see Powder Blues following in the footsteps of the Downchild Blues Band, playing the blues and always paying their dues. Both albums, however, are excellent and both make me want to see the bands live.

The next two groups are a different case. Both The First of September by September and Keep It Alive by Stonebolt try for a blues- based rock style that sounds good on the radio. Both albums are basically boring. In the case of September they have been strongly influenced by The Little River Band, a Vancouver favourite. Like LRB albums before, I listened to the Sep-tember album time after time (hoping to discover the spark, yes one more time) but no, the phosphorus is all wet. All we can hope for is that they keep playing until they find their own style and then make a record. Stonebolt is the only one of the four with a major record company behind them and the company has promoted their single up the Canadian charts. Their influences come from the cold techno-rock of Styx and Boston and the album leaves me cold. I am going to stick to 6 Cylinder and Powder Blues.

Binks behind the bard

By AUDREY JOHNSON

What about that sweet songstress, Sarah Binks? Where did she come from, who gave birth to her? Was there a real person hidden behind that name — a young woman writing sentimental lyrics about her Saskatchewan farm home?

No. Beguilingly real as she appeared from the pages of Paul Hiebert's book and on CBC radio broadcasts of the 40s, Sarah was purely the result of Hiebert's whimsical imagination making gentle mockery of amateur poetasters and their sycophantic discoverers.

Hiebert, whose Sarah Binks brought him the first Leacock Medal for Humor, is in his 88th year and lives at Carman, Man.

Canadian actor Eric Donkin, creator of the one-man show currently at The Belfry, which is based on the book, played the show at Carman and afterward talked to the author.

Hiebert, gifted with a facile ability for doing send-up versions of poetic styles, apparently started the Sarah Binks myth to amuse his chemistry students at the University of Manitoba and fellow guests at routine cocktail parties.

Pretty soon he was enjoying it so much that he invented facts about Sarah in answer to serious questions. He resisted the thought of dissolving her by admitting that she was a total figment of his imagination.

When he had enshrined the Sweet Songstress in manuscript he found publishers were less than eager to put it into print. Eventually someone — possibly Hiebert homself — sent it to Oxford University Press and then forgot about it. In fact Oxford liked it and sent him a form of contract but Hiebert taking it to be a rejection threw the envelope away unopened.

A few months later they followed up with a visit by a representative and that's how Sarah Binks made it into the shiney realm of Canadian award-winning literature.

Donkin, veteran of many major Stratford Festival roles, says he was casting about for a theme for a one-man show when he rediscovered Sarah.

"I decided to develop Rosalind Drool," he says, "although she actually only appears briefly in the book as an enthusiastic proponent of Sarah's poetry. The device allowed me to keep very faithfully to the book otherwise and it has the added advantage of doing away with the 'fourth wall'.

"Drool is a comedy sketch incorporating the dying art of the elocutionist. As a lecturer about, and reciter of Sarah's poetry the live audience is her audience."

Donkin says one very interesting aspect is that it's campy with the kids. "There are actually Sarah Binks fan clubs being formed — they discuss it, recite it, throw quotes around."

And sales of the Hiebert book are also on the upswing again, he reports.

A check around Greater Victoria book stores revealed some already sold out of the paperback edition. Some who didn't stock it had had enquiries and were ordering.

Donkin . . . Stratford-steeped

Donkin has been 13 years with the Stratford Festival company but says he does not intend to return to it this year. In his present tour he has been enjoying sell-out audiences and within the next few months he plans to launch another and more extensive tour.

Consistently acclaimed by major theatre critics, he has worked with directors Robin Phillips, Michael Langham, John Hirsch and John Wood. He has played a Polonius described by John Fraser in The Globe and Mail as transforming the role into one of "almost epic proportions". His King Lear prompted the Canadian Press's Jamie Portman to write: "in the final analysis it's the muted implicity and the consummate intelligence of Donkin's Lear which compel ..."

And in reviewing his Canon Chasuble in The Importance of Being Earnest, Fraser quipped: "Donkin is one of the best actors Stratford has and he should be elevated to a bishopric."

Donkin's Sarah Binks is to be seen at The Belfry tonight and Saturday and in matinee and evening performances on Sunday.

UVic effort rewarding

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The cast which performed A Bistro Car in the University Centre Auditorium last week and the week before, found it rewarding. So did their audiences. Much of the music is memorable and almost all of it is truly singable and has a quality of invention that makes it worth doing.

The show by Vancouverites Pat Rose (music), Richard Ouzounian and Merv Campone (lyrics), is the sixth to be undertaken by the UVic Music Theatre.

The original small cast of four had been greatly expanded to permit participation by all the 32 students in the Department of Education's Music Theatre Workshop.

That's where it all began four years ago with Dale McIntosh's special interest and some ideas he had about the quality of teaching. McIntosh, who arranged and directed the music part of the show.

McIntosh started his own teaching life in Rosetown, Sask., where he spent 12 years as a high school music teacher. He began with the usual band and then choir formations. But soon what he saw as the "needs of the kids" — the inability on the part of many to express themselves easily — led to his starting music theatre.

"The musical stage is generally more accessible to young people than regular theatre," he says, "and there are few things as effective in instilling communication skills."

He is also firm in his belief that "a teacher who can act will turn out to be a better teacher."

Before coming to Victoria in 1974, McIntosh was a civil servant in Edmonton, serving as Director of Performing Arts. "I was about three down from minister; I hated it. It was all letter-writing for the signature of the man at the top . . ."

Bishop goes to Capitol

By CLAUDE ADAMS
FP Services

WASHINGTON — Billy Bishop Goes to War, a Canadian musical about the heroics and traumas of the World War I flying ace, dazzled its first-ever American audience here last night at a VIP-studded opening night.

The response to the one-man show, which was brought here by producer Mike Nichols, left writer and composer John Gray with heady thoughts about eventually strafing Broadway audiences with his production.

"Yes, there are some plans to put us on Broadway," Gray, a Nova Scotia native, said later in a crowded dressing room. "I'll believe it when I see it."

Actor Eric Peterson, who plays Bishop as well as nearly a dozen other characters, ranging from a stiff British general to a cabaret chanteuse, got an extended standing ovation along with Gray, who also accompanies him on the piano.

In the audience were a clutch of U.S. senators, Washington Post publisher Katherine Graham, American intelligence chief Stansfield Turner, Canadian Ambassador Peter Towe and, to lend an appropriate military touch, Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Many of them lined up to congratulate Gray and Peterson later in the dressing room.

The premiere was presented by Washington's Arena Stage in co-operation with the Vancouver East Cultural Centre, where Billy Bishop originated in late 1978. It will play here for three weeks.

While American audiences may not be familiar with the exploits of Bishop, the reckless pilot who shot down 72 enemy aircraft in a little more than a year to become the allies' most decorated pilot and the sensation of wartime London, they were delighted with the Gray-Peterson treatment of his life.

The production shifts easily from hilarity to melodrama and back again, and Peterson's arresting recreation of aerial dogfights, using only a microphone and a chair, is a highlight of the night.

So enthused was the audience, in fact, that they even applauded when Peterson pulled back a giant "hangar" door on stage where the front portion of an ancient biplane had been mounted.

"It's superb, I really want to read about Bishop after seeing this," said one woman during the intermission.

"Peterson's portrayal of Bishop is uncanny," remarked a senator. "It's a damn fine show."

Gray said after the performance that he was delighted with the quickness of the opening night audience. He noted that one line in the show, which refers to Bishop's "life-wish," rarely gets a laugh in Canada, but the Washington audience picked up on it immediately and enthusiastically.

"I also noticed that Canadian audiences get a little uneasy with the references to the 'colonals' who want Britain to fight in the war, but the audience here seemed to take it well."

Gray and Peterson hit on the idea for the show after reading Bishop's autobiography, Winged Warfare. With a small grant from a Toronto theatre, they researched old war archives and Bishop's private plays. The show opened in Vancouver, and went coast-to-coast. Mike Nichols got wind of its success, and journeyed to the small western Ontario town of Listowel, in the midst of a blizzard, to catch it.

The show's strength is that, while sketching Bishop's life from his antics at Royal Military College to his daredevilry over the skies of wartorn Europe and beyond, it says well clear of hero-mongering.

Bishop, despite the legend, was a bundle of nerves before missions. He was obsessed with survival. "The only way to learn survival," Peterson has Bishop saying, "is to survive."

Throughout the production, Gray and Peterson frequently return to the haunting theme melody: "We were off to fight the Hun, we would shoot him with a gun, and our medals shone like sabres in the sun . . . somehow it didn't seem like war at all."

LATE BLOOMER Mary Jago takes break from rehearsal preparing for role in National Ballet of Canada's production of Swan Lake. At 33, after 10 years as a principal dancer with the company, Jago is getting a number of lead parts in this year's productions.

around the galleries

Three major Canadian photographers are represented in an exhibition currently on view at Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort. All the photographs are on loan from the National Film Board still photography division.

Shin Sugino, a lecturer in photography at York University and editor of Impressions magazine, is showing Pilgrimage, which he defines as "a journey to seek confirmation of one's faith."

Portraits by Arnaud Maggs are simple uncluttered representations of how people look. His background and training are in design and drawing. He photographs in large, unforgiving format, the head and shoulders of his subject from the front and from the right side.

Maggs remains faithful to his purpose: the depiction of one human being by another.

In The Secret Garden, Jennifer Dickson makes a statement about herself.

"After trying on the clothes of post 50s English landscape romanticism, abstract expressionism and color research for its own sake, I finally decided to level with myself aesthetically and be the romantic-symbolist my childhood with Alma Tadema and Lord Leighton had prepared me for," she says.

Dickson has received many grants and prizes including an International Women's Year Award from the Ontario Arts Council that subsidized The Secret Garden.

More than 15 local women artists are involved in A Celebration of Women, a mixed media exhibition arranged to mark International Women's Day. The exhibition is located on the lower level of Market Square, near Munro's Book Store. It can be viewed this week from noon to 4 p.m.

The conscience of a scientist

By JULIAN REID

DISTURBING THE UNIVERSE, by Freeman Dyson. Fitzhenry & Whiteside. $16.95.
THE STARSHIP AND THE CANOE, by Kenneth Brower. Bantam. $1.95.

Freeman Dyson is a theoretical physicist — which means he is above all a dreamer. Since 1953 he has lived in Princeton, New Jersey, where he teaches at the prestigious Institute for Advanced Studies. But his real home lies otherwhere and otherwhen — perhaps in the yet-unformed future, a realm with which he is, by his own confession, "obsessed."

Disturbing the Universe is, in some sense, Dyson's intellectual and spiritual autobiography. But is not autobiography in any conventional sense, soaring as it does over such insignificent mundanities as hearth and home, marriage and divorce and children, with a sublimely other-worldly indifference. Instead, the author's central concern is with what he terms "the ethical problems of war and peace, freedom and responsibility, hope and despair, as these are affected by science" — and, inevitably, as they affected this one particular scientist; although, as he points out, "almost any scientist of my generation could tell you a similar story."

English-born, Dyson was compelled by the Second World War to set aside his youthful pacifism and go to work as a civilian scientific adviser for the R.A.F.'s Bomber Command — an organization which, in his own words, "might have been invented by some mad sociologist as an example to exhibit as clearly as possible the evil aspects of science and technology."

The environment was insidiously corrupting. "Since the beginning of the war," he confesses, "I had been retreating step by step from one moral position to another, until at the end I had no moral position at all." This experience affected Dyson deeply; it sets the tone for most of these memoirs.

The war over, he moved to the U.S., where he soon became involved with J. Robert Oppenheimer and the "Los Alamos gang" of nuclear physicists — the scientists who had been conscripted into the Manhatten Project to construct the world's first Atomic Bomb. These ebullient young Americans troubled Dyson profoundly: "They lacked the tragic sense of life which was deeply ingrained in every European of my generation. They had never lived with tragedy and had no feeling for it. Having no sense of tragedy, they also had no sense of guilt."

This "tragic sense of life" and its relevance to the scientific endeavor is Dyson's central concern throughout most of this book. He considers it in relation not only to the military and political applications of science, but also to such issues of "basic research" as the current debate over research into recombitant DNA and the techniques of genetic engineering. At its heart, Disturbing the Universe revolves around a troubled and humanely eloquent consideration of "the question that must ultimately be faced by all believers in scientific progress: Can man play god and still stay sane?"

Only after offering his answer — a resounding "No!" — does Dyson finally feel free to spread his wings and soar off into the speculative empyrean which is his true home now. In these concluding chapters his focus shifts to his guiding vision of "a grand design for the expansion of terrestrial life into the universe" — and a bracing and stimulatingly optimistic vision it is!

Here we finally meet the Freeman Dyson who in 1958 joined forces with a small band of fellow scientific visionaries to mount Project Orion, an abortive attempt to design an inexpensive small-size spaceship which would propel itself around the solar system by exploding war-surplus atomic bombs in its wake.

This one out of Dyson's many facets is the only one of which naturalist Kenneth Brower seems aware — at least, it is the one he ventures to project in lieu of the whole man in his wonderfully evocative book, The Starship and the Canoe. But this imbalance matters less than it might, for Brower's real interest lies with Dyson's only son, George, who at first glance seems about as far removed from his father as it is humanly possible to be.

The younger Dyson lives some 95 feet above the ground in an elaborate tree-house he has constructed in Belcarra Park, just outside Vancouver. A youthful pacifist like his father, he avoided implication in the moral maelstrom of Vietnam by dodging the draft and the U.S. authorities and fleeing to safety in Canada. Very much a child of the 1960's, he is above all concerned with living at one with his natural surroundings. ("Sanity," his father insists, "is, in its essence, nothing more than the ability to live in harmony with nature.")

George Dyson's chosen avocation is the building of boats — giant all-weather canoes for navigating the B.C. coastline, inspired by traditional native designs but constructed out of space-age materials. It is with the design and voyagings of these "super-kayaks" that Brower's book is mainly concerned; and his account of the journey from Torch Bay in the Alaska Panhandle south to Alert Bay which he and George made together in a giant fibreglass "baidarka" is as eloquently evocative a piece of writing as anyone could reasonably ask.

It is elsewhere that the besetting weakness of his book lies — particularly in its treatment of the elder Dyson and its mildly pretentious attempt to generate deeper significances by ironically counterpointing the two, paralleling George's dream of a 62-foot, 12-passenger super-canoe with Project Orion and its abortive bomb-powered "starship." In the process, alas, Brower demonstrates only his own lack of that tragic sense of life which the elder Dyson possesses in such rich measure. The result is a lack of any real insight into the personalities of either father or son, and a resulting inability to penetrate very far beyond the simplistic cliche of the so-called "generation gap."

Splendid though The Starship and the Canoe is within its limits, it lacks the deeper and more humane resonances of Disturbing the Universe — an inevitable consequence of Brower's failure to transcend the superficial tensions separating the two Dysons and glimpse behind them the profounder harmony which unites such contrasting personalities. And so it is left to the older and wiser ex-Englishman to sum up the essential quality linking him to his equally remarkable son. "We are both free spirits," observes the father proudly, "at home anywhere in the universe, wherever we happen to be."

'A harvest of long cemeteries'

By DOUG BEARDSLEY

REMAINS OF ELMET, Poems by Ted Hughes, Photographs by Fay Godwin. Faber and Faber. $12.95.
AT THE EDGE OF THE BODY, by Erica Jong. Holt, Rinehart and Winston. $4.95.

Following closely on the success of her collaboration with John Fowles which produced the widely acclaimed Islands last year, Fay Godwin has turned her lens on the Remains of Elmet, and Ted Hughes has written a long sequence of poems 'inspired' by her black and white photographs. While not nearly as memorable a collaboration as the earlier book, the Remains of Elmet is, nevertheless, an interesting experiment.

Elmet is the name of the ancient kingdom of Yorkshire, the last British Celtic kingdom to fall to the Angles, and Hughes' poems attempt to evoke the landscape, people, and history of the area where he was born and spent his childhood. At one time a wilderness refuge for notorious criminals, Elmet became the cradle for the Industrial Revolution in textiles, though the mills of the region have been slowly dying since the 1960s.

Godwin's excellent photographs successfully capture both the ancient history and the later industrial chaos of "this harvest of long cemetries" when "everything fell wetly to bits," but many of Hughes' short, descriptive lyrics seem commissioned rather than inspired.

Fay Godwin's best photograph is one of the few that has a face in it, a Crown Point pensioner looking out over the land. That weathered, happy face, like "a stone inside surf," tells me more about the business of living in that place than all the words in these poems.

Finally, I couldn't help wondering what the last of the millers would make of this book.

Ms. Jong's four books of poetry (of which At The Edge Of The Body is the latest) have been overshadowed by her reputation as the fiction bitch-goddess of the American '70s.

I find it difficult to believe that the American anthologist, Louis Untermeyer, characterized her as "our female Chaucer," but it is clear that in the poems Erica Jong strives to achieve a modicum of respectability absent in her more marketable books.

JONG
. . . unease

The 40 poems in At The Edge Of The Body are prefaced by 17 quotations or epigraphs. Tagore, Roethke, Carlos Castaneda, Christopher Smart, Tolstoy, La Rochefoucauld, Emerson, Neruda, and Florence Nightingale are just some of the diverse figures, poetic and otherwise, that have apparently served as starting points for the author, yet they seem to have been employed to give the poems and Ms. Jong some "philosophical weight", some sense of literary legitimacy.

Surprisingly, the best of her work doesn't require this artificial, academic scaffolding. "Woman enough", "Literature Need Not", "Paper Stars" "Zen & the Art of Poetry", and "House-Hunting 1976" (her own optimistic Ginsbergian Howl) all realize their promise, yet seem slightly flawed, a little off-centre, somewhat lightweight, touching upon sentimentality, a little too concerned with facial wrinkles. In short, there is an accomplished unease at the centre of these poems.

Ms. Jong brings an enormous will to her work, but little imaginative creation. She is reading the right material but is more concerned with self-image than imagery. What metaphors she does give us are of the domestic variety, offering a kind of backyard bliss.

The making of good poetry is simply not as easy as Ms. Jong makes it out to be.

A unique blend of realism, fantasy

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

THE BEGINNING PLACE, by Ursula K. LeGuin. Fitzhenry and Whiteside. $11.75.

Ursula K. LeGuin is one of the most prolific and entertaining writers of our day. Although her last novel was a disaster, it was at least interesting: one could sense its possibilities. Now, with her latest novel, LeGuin is fully exploring the possible again with her unique blend of realism and fantasy.

For 20-year-old Hugh Rogers — checker at Sam's Thrift-E-Mart, son to a mother terrified of her loneliness — the place he discovers in the woods across the highway "was like an island, time running to either side of it like the water of a river, like the tides past a rock in the sand. You could go there and stay and you would come out to the moment you left. Or almost."

Or almost: the phrase typifies the insistent tone of this story. LeGuin manages to establish and maintain a tension that never lets up. The suspense really stems from the nature of the story's ground, for nothing is as it seems to be in that wooded glade with the clear cold pool.

For Irene, who has been coming there since she was 13 in an effort to avoid her step-father's broken cars and grabbing hands, the place was "where she did what she felt like. This was the place where she was her self, her own."

They meet, of course: violent and hostile, both of them, fumbling at understanding each other and the place they have come to.

The theme of The Beginning Place, then, is common enough. But the plot! — ah, the plot.

LeGuin seems to have a special fondness for a place and time that conjures up a middle Europe of some two or three hundred years ago, if her two volumes of short stories in particular are any indication.

And so here: the main trail from the beginning place leads to the hill town of Tembreadbrezi and its people: Sofir, Palizot, the Mater, Lord Horn and Allia. The town is a beautiful place filled with people who care for Irene, but it is threatened by an unnamed trouble that is slowly forcing the people to starvation.

The trouble must be vanquished. Hugh Rogers is chosen by Lord Horn and given a sword. Irene will lead him to the fight.

To say more would be unfair. The Beginning Place must be read.

From Bloomsbury games to 'Kafka-like' world

By ANTHONY JENKINS

THE WISE VIRGINS, by Leonard Woolf. Clarke, Irwin. $22.95.
THE PASSION ARTIST, by John Hawkes. Fitzhenry & Whiteside. $12.95.

It comes as a surprise to discover that Leonard Woolf once wrote two novels in addition to his more recent and well-received volumes of autobiography. The Wise Virgins was first published in the autumn of 1914, and "the war killed it dead . . . my total earnings from it were £20."

At this first reprinting, I doubt that many readers, considering the steep Canadian price, will want the book for its story; our public manners have changed too rapidly for the gentle ironies of the novel's ending to make themselves still felt. Yet as an authentic picture of middle-class London suburbia just before the Great War, and for its dispassionate sidelights on Vanessa and Virginia Stephen, Clive Bell, and Sir Leslie himself, the novel offers endless fascination.

For instance, the opening chapter creates a panorama view of Richstead (Putney) in 1912. Its similar avenues of stalwart brick evoke an image of humankind who, despite gregarious instincts, want still to preserve their individualism: "They wear the same straw hats and muslim dresses in summer, and in winter bowlers and dark dresses; they think the same things in the same way, because the ways of this strange world in which they find themselves wandering are so difficult to understand . . . But in themselves . . . under the painted plaster crust of straw hats and opinions, they burn each of them with a fiery individuality."

The gentle pace of the ensuing pages, in which characters languidly discuss their feelings about life and each other, pefectly captures the rhythms of the Edwardian twilight. At the church fete, ladies of a certain standing do not "know" the wives of the parvenu merchant class. On the river, while the "young people" stroll the banks (carefuly averting their eyes from the less seemly pleasures of the city workers), their fathers stretch out on the grass with their pipes and their mothers chat uncomfortably in the boats beneath their parasols.

The unique ingredient in that social picture comes from the fact that Woolf himself was Jewish and so is sensitive to a prejudice which is ever present though only spoken behind closed doors.

Finally there is the portrait of Camilla, the fictive guise of Virginia Woolf, the author's wife. Harry is attracted to her flights of imagination, her piercing intelligence, her alluring frigidity: "I don't suppose it's done him any — any harm falling in love with me. I'm not heartless . . . I suppose really it is my brain. But it's too clear . . ."

Few real-life courtships can have been drawn with such open-eyed clarity. Like Camilla herself, the novel is supremely reasonable in its analysis of the heart and society. Yet despite (or because, of) its intelligence, its delight in good talk and fine energies, the book freezes life into art. So that, unintentionally, the novel also illustrates by comparison how the genius of Virginia Woolf broke free from the cold snobberies of Bloomsbury.

Nothing could be less like Bloomsbury than the subterranean world of John Hawkes. Woolf's characters, though they differ in education, presuppose an assured and rational universe; Hawkes explores the disordered and perverse corridors of the unconscious mind.

In The Passion Artist he has deliberately set out to create his most unsympathetic protagonist. Konrad Vost is dowdy, dried-up, precise, "without distinction or power of any kind." And beneath that outer husk, Vost's nature is controlled by his obsessive image of his wife, some five years dead, and his mother, a prisoner since his childhood.

Hawkes' recurring theme centres on the love-hate dualities in sex. This novel depicts Vost's hallucinatory journey into his darker self under the impact of the discovery [illegible] his daughter is no longer a child. His libidinous fantasies will not be to every taste, nor will every reader be prepared to acknowledge a truth behind those nightmare pictures. Yet, like it or not, Hawkes captures the trauma of our times just as Woolf has caught the niceties of the Edwardians.

HAWKES . . . perverse corners

For myself, I can't say I enjoy Hawkes, though I admire his work immeasurably. This novel, in particular, presents a European city out of Kafka: a grey, sterile wasteland of windowless concrete buildings which trumpet repression, bureaucracy, fear. Like Vost, the anonymous city has a repellent yet attractive effect. And once those actualities begin to dissolve into the mist, mud, and fierce horrors of Vost's own mind, I became the book's unwilling but helpless prisoner.

Apart from the superb monstrosity of his imagination, Hawkes is undoubtedly the most precise and elegant stylist among contemporary American novelists. His characteristic paragraphs build block upon block of crisply etched phrases towards a central climax, marked by a colon, to descend from there in equally rhythmic patterns:

"Dust, patches of marsh, a slaughtered animal in a wooden shed, a hooded woman beside a well that would soon be dry, vast natural gardens of rocks or clumps of grass that resembled hopelessly tangled coils of electric wiring, and the dirt roads and encrusted gardens and the red dragonfly on a sunken post, and over everything the light and shadow that told of nothingness. in all this was [illegible] the only terrain appropriate to the city that featured La Violaine in its racks of weathered postcards and denied the image of woman to advertising or to public artwork."

Such musical control and verbal dexterity provide an anchor to cling to amid the buffetings of this surreal journey. In its masterly style and vision, The Passion Artist seems to me an extraordinary and disturbing achievement.

Reno booms on despite a burst of the blahs

Backlash against gambling cited

RENO, Nev. — The Money Tree has dried up.

The Money Tree was one of the newer, neon-flashy gambling casinos on the main drag of this northern Nevada oasis that proudly proclaims itself "The Biggest Little City in the World."

So when the Money Tree Casino abruptly locked its doors, posting signs saying "Temporarily Closed," it sent a quiver through this region of heavy dependence on gambling.

It was the latest in a series of puzzling casino closures in Reno, which just a year ago was being touted as another Western-style boom town, another Las Vegas, another Atlantic City.

Major corporations, like MGM, had invested huge sums in Reno's promising future. Hordes were flocking to the eastern Sierra city to get a piece of the action—so many, in fact, that it created a housing shortage.

It is still critical. Some people still live in tents by the Truckee River, waiting for their homes to be built.

The construction boom is on, but two other downtown Reno casinos have closed in recent weeks, while others are rumored to be in serious financial trouble.

All of that worries Nevadans, whose state's economic base is firmly set in the green felt of the gaming tables. They worry it could spread south to—heaven forbid—Las Vegas.

An effect of the bumpy national economy? Probably not. In hard times, people usually gamble more, not less, and places like Reno, Las Vegas and Atlantic City feel anything but a pinch.

In Reno, at least this winter, there are fewer places to toss the dice, pull the one-arm bandits and take a chance.

And old-time gaming palaces—Harold's Club, Harrah's, Mapes and the Sahara—report they are not exactly doing boom-town business.

On a cold, blizzardy Reno night recently—typical weather for the early months of the year—brightly lit Virginia Street was so quiet you could hear a ring drop in the brimming Truckee, which roars through the middle of town.

The Horseshoe Club, which fronts on Virginia in the centre of casino row, has had its front doors boarded, promising no quick return to business.

A new addition to the huge Sahara-Reno also has been closed.

The spanking new Money Tree, with its dancing money trees, closed its newest addition in an unexpected move that put close to 200 people out of work.

Immediate blame for the current blahs is being split between the weather, inflation and gasoline prices.

Reno overall still has that boom-town tinge.

The airline terminal is getting a major expansion as a host of air carriers push to get in on the action.

Huge cranes reach up into the Reno skyline, signs of more high-rise structures to come.

Streets are torn up everywhere. More hotels and casinos are planned.

Some of the larger casinos plan to follow the example of the opulent MGM Grand, which juts out east of town, away from casino centre but near the airport.

Outside of town, parking is plentiful. Downtown, it is hard to find. "Parking downtown can be chaotic," said one longtime Renoite.

Whatever the cause of Reno's woes, it isn't soaring prices. Most wagers in the casinos are impervious to inflation. For $1 you still can bet red or black on the roulette wheel. A nickel puts you in a slot machine.

Jackpots and other payoffs are larger. Rooms and meals are cheap. Prime rib is $3 in one downtown club, a room is $20. Gasoline is $1.05 a gallon at this writing and is plentiful.

If it isn't weather, inflation or gasoline, what is it? Economists are scurrying for answers.

"Unsettled times may have caused people to take a serious look at taking a gamble when things are tough," said William Slatter, who watches such things for one downtown hotel-casino.

Gambling, he says, may be suffering a conservative backlash.

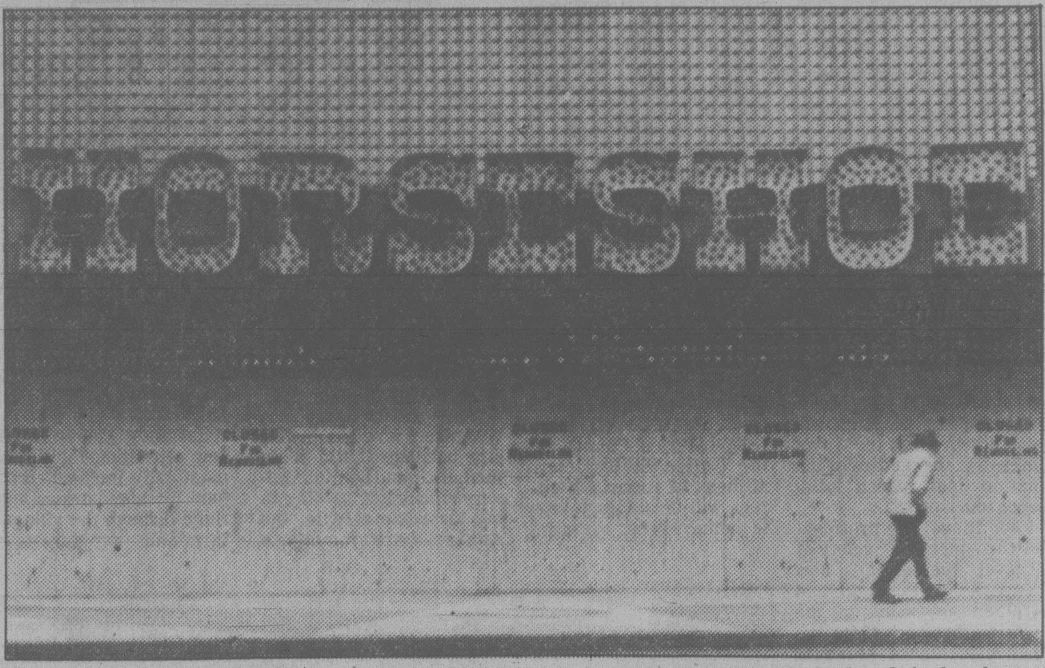
Even the MGM Grand, momentarily stunned by a $120,000 fine for selling lesser-quality booze in its prime-label liquor bottles, is feeling it.

Its football park-sized casino was nearly empty at 7:30 a.m. the Friday I was there. Believe it or not, there are usually crowds at that hour. Casinos here stay open all night.

"Usually we have a crowd at two to three crap tables even around 4 a.m.," said one MGM pit boss.

The hotel, however, was brimming, as was the coffee shop. People were eating and drinking.

But they weren't gambling.



The boards are up for some casinos and there's no telling if they'll be back in business

Venice something to savor many ways

By EVELYN KIERAN

It took some of history's greatest diplomats many years to make one nation from the collection of kingdoms, republics and city-states which we know as Italy today.

From the Alpine north to the sunny Mediterranean, there existed a collection of fiefdoms so distinct and so different from each other that open warfare between them was commonplace.

Visit some of Italy's principal cities and you will understand. Yet it is these very differences which reward the traveller with a diversity not found in many other countries.

From Rome, the eternal, we had come to Venice by train. It is a pleasant journey, a comfortable trip through the gentle Tuscan hills, past fields burgeoning with vines, orchards promising the rich fruit of a later season and towns whose names conjuring all the history and romance of our school days.

It is easy to enjoy the country through the big windows and to revel in the changing light.

There are no suburbs to Venice. It is an assault on all the senses and suddenly, you are there.

For me, it is one of those cities where the music starts a mile away, and it never stops.

At the railroad station, the chatter of rich Italian voices mingles with the low hum of launches jostling for position at dockside. Hawkers, drivers, porters demand attention. Somewhere a noble tenor spills song into the air. Water slaps endlessly against the gondolas, the water taxis and the piers. Like the deep-throated murmur of a well-tuned engine, it all blends into a feeling of expectancy, anything is possible in this fairy-tale city.

Along the Grand Canal, the plot unfolds. Gondoliers polish their boats for enthusiastic tourists. Lightheartedly they call to each other about affairs of the day. Here and there a fleet gathers, one boat reserved for the musicians, and they proceed slowly along the canal, singing, playing, serenading.

Vaporettos, the colorful water buses of the city, take ordinary citizens and visitors from San Marco to Piazzale Roma and back, rumbling in and out of the colorful stops for passengers hurrying to markets, shops, churches, government buildings, palaces.

Venice is a city to be savored, to lose directions, only to find oneself in an adventure. A tour, led by one of the city's gentle professors, will give you a capsuleful of history, a smattering of architecture and a glimpse of art treasures too rich to absorb in so little time. After all, Venice grew through 10 centuries, years of prosperity, trade and interest in the development of the fine arts. You cannot possibly appreciate it all in a few days.

But you can enjoy it in a dozen different ways, as the Venetians do. At table, for example, it's almost impossible to find a bad restaurant in all of Venice. The food is among the best in Italy, fresh, especially the seafood and produce, cooked with imagination and great skill, served with appreciation and great style.

In the shops, pleasure is unbounded.

Centuries of fine craftsmanship, generations of skilled artisans, literally fill the marketplace with beautiful things.

And Venice revels in it all.

ON the GO with JERRY HULSE

If you're wondering what the world holds for the traveller in this opening year of the '80s, stand by.

Tourism could be big business or—there could be weak spots, depending on where you point to on the globe.

Patch up the world in one place and it blows out in another. Who would have guessed a few years back that by 1980 we'd be romancing China and cooling it with Russia?

Who's next on the Good Guy list? Vietnam? North Korea? Iran? Don't laugh, it could happen.

Contrary to rumbles you'll hear from the travel industry, the politics of the nation does indeed influence tourism.

Joe Stone, the president of the American Society of Travel Agents, tells how Yugoslavia, Portugal and Iceland are some of the world's best buys. On the expensive side of the ledger are Geneva, Paris, Amsterdam, Tokyo, Frankfurt, London and Stockholm. He rates Madrid, Olso and Rome as only slightly less expensive.

Meanwhile, with rising fuel costs and the depreciation of the dollar, Stone and his brethren forecast higher prices in nearly all areas of travel.

Cruise ships will go shorter distances more slowly to save fuel

Because of high fuel costs there's a strong possibility of shorter cruises in the 1980s. Shorter in distance, not time. What this means is that a ship may travel only 1,000 miles where normally it had traveled 1,500 miles. The cruise will involve the same number of days but a slower cruising speed.

Other predictions: Car rental firms will be hiring the traveller smaller, more economical cars, and competition among the airlines will grow more fierce as a result of deregulation.

Possibly the surest destinations to make it big with Uncle Sam's flock this year will be Mexico, Canada and the United States itself. Millions of American citizens will be staying closer to home in '80, exploring this country as well as our neighboring nations.

And while perhaps fewer in numbers, others will be jetting and sailing overseas.

But unlike yesterday's traveller who roamed the world on a loose, casual itinerary, growing numbers are signing up for prepaid tours to avoid those shocking prices that keep getting more shocking.

Still, it's not all gloom. If one shops around there still are bargains.

Among the season's cheapies is an eight-day La Paz package that's being passed around by Club Universe for only $199. Climbing the scale a trifle, the same folks are promoting a combination La Paz-Guadalajara holiday for $379.

Could staying home be any cheaper?

Pleasant Hawaiian Holidays is making loud noises about a week in Waikiki for a mere $379. And Brendan Tours will take you to London or Paris and back for under $600.

Michener's Tahiti is only $549 via UTA French Airlines, and 16 days in Australia-New Zealand is the bait being cast about by Continental Airlines. The Price: $945.

Germany has a brand-new attraction for the romantically inclined. It's a tour by horse-drawn carriage through the villages, farmlands and forests of southern Bavaria. The asking price is $90 to $335 for two to four days.

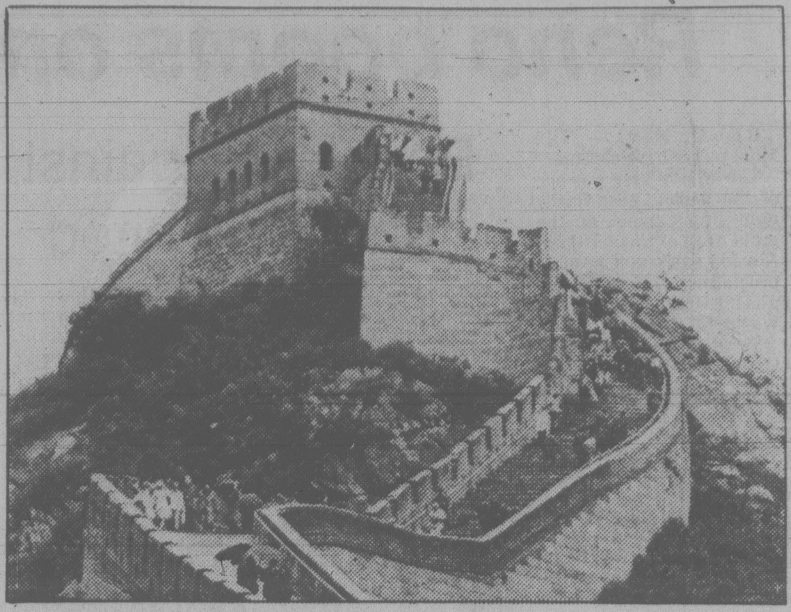
Now for the vacationer with an urge to run away on the railroad try steam trains in Britain.

Volunteers help out at the throttle of the locomotive, learning signalling, engineering and other railroad assignments.

Tuition runs $128 and $230 for a week of highballing it through Britain. Check it out with Travel Britain, Irradion House, Southdown Road, Harpenden, Herts, England.

Meanwhile, Continental Waterways is fuelling up its barges for river and canal runs through France and England again this year. Passengers will cruise through Burgundy, snooze in snug cabins and soak rays on two sundecks.

Rates on voyages run about $100 a day.



China—if you haven't been there you haven't been anywhere

Trippers with sturdy legs will be biking their way through Europe. The League of American Wheelmen is putting together a bicycle tour of Holland, Germany and Belgium. What's more, the price is right: $987. That includes the air fare, meals and accommodations. Write to the league: Box 988, Baltimore, Md. 21203.

For the jaded traveller with $9,000 in the kitty, Lindblad Travel is scheduling a first-ever cruise aboard the Lindblad Explorer to the sub-Antarctic islands of the Indian Ocean. This is an 11,000-mile voyage from Singapore to Indonesia, Christmas Island, Cocos Islands, the French islands of Amsterdam, St. Paul, Keruelen and Crozet; South Africa's Prince Edward Islands, the Norwegian island of Bouvet and Great Britain's South Georgia and Sandwich islands. The final stop will be Argentina.

And China? Ah, yes, China. Pretty soon unless you've been to China you'll be classed as an outcast. It's the in place with travellers. Just as Russia once was. Never mind that the hotels are seedy and the water pouring from the spigots is polluted. You simply must go. Otherwise you'll likely be ostracized by the folks who have. So see your travel agent.

And ask him about the Wok Talk Culinary Tour. The idea here is to feast your way through China. It's a 21-day package bacchanal and it's expensive: $3,545. Visits to Peking, Guilin, Guangzhou, Hangzhou and Shanghai.

Come home without gout and they promise to conduct an investigation. You fly with Singapore Airlines. That's the outfit that's rated R for Remarkable for its in-flight food and service.

Closer to home, the Oceanic Independence will be making seven-day interisland cruises in Hawaii this summer. Rates start at $645. The jet hop from the mainland is extra.

If none of this strikes your fancy, ring up your travel agents. Call the airlines. Or get the cruise people on the phone.

PARK v. MAN: Everglades battle for survival

Park alligator on silent cruise for meal

By ROBERT M. PRESS

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, FLA. — At the end of a snaking, one-lane road jutting several miles into a shallow, watery sea of sawgrass here in Everglades National Park, an alligator floats watchfully in a pond, its periscope eyes open for any signs of an approaching snack.

Near the opposite (southern) end of the park, close to a wooden boardwalk over a marsh, a giant anhinga (water turkey) sits on a low branch drying its wings in the afternoon sun.

In between these two public observation posts, the seldom-seen Florida panther, an endangered species, quietly stalks its next meal. Elsewhere in the park, the American crocodile, indigo snake, Cape Sable seaside sparrow, Southern bald eagle, West Indian manatee, peregrine falcon and other federally listed endangered species have their breeding grounds.

Altogether, the park hosts more than 300 species of birds, many of them extremely rare; 25 orchid varieties; 120 species of trees, and some 1,000 kinds of seed-bearing plants.

There are five distinct types of vegetation, including the tree islands called hammocks locally (hummocks elsewhere) and coastal mangrove areas.

But just how much of this will survive for future visitors to enjoy is uncertain. The Everglades is in trouble—more so today than at any time since the park was dedicated in 1947 by President Harry S Truman.

"The problems are more acute now because of the competition for space and water outside the park," says Dr. Gary Hendrix, the park's research director.

Development outside the park, mostly in metropolitan Miami, has reduced the amount of water nature used to deliver to the park by about 50 per cent, he says. And water is the lifeline for the Everglades, two-thirds of which is normally covered with water for at least part of each year.

Some species are disappearing and others are increasingly threatened, mostly because of man-regulated changes in the Everglades' water levels. Now, mounting pressures for development in areas near the park could result in more farming, with harmful chemical runoffs into the park; and more housing and further interference with water reaching it.

Among the danger signals already flashing are these:

- Last year about 40 per cent of the alligator eggs in the northern part were destroyed when too much water was released into the Everglades by the Army Corps of Engineers, seeking to reduce the risk of flooding in the Miami area. Park researchers suggest that, next time, more water could be released over undeveloped land near the park—but there are growing pressures to develop that land.
- Some wading birds are moving out, for reasons not yet fully determined.
- Wood storks, listed by Florida as an endangered species, are in trouble. Government-regulated flows of water into the park are coming at intervals different from nature's timing, interfering with the birds' breeding.
- Some man-introduced trees are destroying native plant life, with potentially devastating effects on wildlife.
- Lower freshwater levels (from less water reaching the park) have increased the amount of salt water creeping upwater from the ocean. This has reduced prime nursing areas for pink shrimp (a commercial favorite) and snook and tarpon (game fish).

"The big problem is how the park can survive so close to a metropolitan area," says Jerry Hammond, chief ranger of the National Park Service (NPS) at the Everglades.

Two years ago Congress began funding a broad research program by the NPS to try to solve these problems. The aim was to determine just how the intricate, delicate mix of plant and wildlife in the park survives, how much water it needs and when, and what the quality of the water must be.

If water gates were constructed through the two-lane Tamiami Trail Highway, and if future development did not interfere, water flow to the park would more closely resemble the way nature intended it, park researchers say. Species traditionally dependent on nature's timing for water flow and direction might thus be further protected, they add.

Park researchers are not sure just how much water should be allowed into the Everglades, or when. One problem they have discovered is that since water flow now is controlled so evenly, the "pulsing," or periodic rush of water during rainy seasons, is missing. This has caused a higher salinity in park water as ocean water seeps farther upstream, says Gary Davis, an NPS marine biologist. Some species of fish cannot adapt to this change and are in increasing danger, he says.

Despite such problems, Davis says he is optimistic that the research will come up with recommendations for better water management.

Solving vacation money blues

AROUND the WORLD with STAN DELAPLANE

The Questions, The Answers: ''Carry credit cards? Or travellers' cheques? Or cash?''

Carry some of each. Find I use credit cards most often—it saves cash—and cheques when I need them. But—carry personal cheques too. Hotels won't take them. Big stores overseas won't take them. But nearly all tourist shops will take them. Written in the exact amount of what you bought. Ask. Write the cheque. Show them your passport.

In fact, they prefer it. London shopkeeper said: ''For me, it's the full cash amount. If I put the charge on your credit card, I have to pay the credit people a commission.''

ON A $500 CLOTHING buy in Hong Kong, I said: ''Suppose I give you $500 in travel cheques instead of putting it on my American Express card?''

He said: ''Then I'll give you a 7 per cent discount. That's what I'd have to pay American Express.''

Point is to get the price. (Bargain in tourist shops. They're all marked up to discount). Then offer travel cheques or cash or a personal cheque and ask for a cut.

Doesn't always work with things that cost less than $25. But if you're going $100 or better, it will. Try it. You'll see.

CREDIT CARDS ARE for restaurant and hotel bills. They won't discount for cash. And they've already marked up their prices 7 per cent or more to take care of credit card charges.

So if you pay cash, you're paying part of the bill of the credit card holder at the next table.

ABOUT $25 IN cash is for emergencies. You've checked out of overseas hotel. You've cashed in your foreign money—pounds, francs, or escudos. You check in at the ticket counter.

''There's a departure tax,'' says the ticket man.

Now you're faced with cashing a travel cheque. And getting unwanted foreign money. You go into the departure lounge and want a cup of coffee.

This is the time you whip out a few dollar bills. They'll take them. They only have to go over to the airport bank and cash them in.

DOLLAR BILLS ARE okay for hotel tips on arrival. But not silver change. The porter and chambermaid can't cash them. Airport banks handle enough foreign currency that they're set up for it.

Spread out a handful of credit cards: American Express, Diners Club, VISA, on the restaurant table abroad. Nine chances in ten, they'll pick VISA.

A Paris restaurant owner told me: ''I can take this charge to the bank tomorrow and get my money. Sometimes it takes American Express a long time to clear the charge and send me the cash.''

VISA and Master Charge are increasingly popular with overseas restaurants and shops. (But in shops you won't get a discount. So use cash, travel cheques or a personal cheque.)

IN MOVING FROM country to country—say, one hour from London to Paris. Unload your English pounds for French francs at the airport bank. Do NOT change into dollars in London and then turn these into French francs in Paris.

Everytime you change money, there's a small service charge. About one per cent, but why give it away?

AMERICAN EXPRESS and Diners Club charge you for your credit cards. A charge getting higher each year. Your bank will give you a VISA or Master Charge card free.

SHOULD YOU GET one of those handsome wallets—with initials and gold corners—that have pockets for passport, travel cheques, credit cards, air tickets—maybe a spare life jacket?

They ARE pretty. But it seems to me this is a handy way to put EVERYTHING you don't want to lose in one package. So if you lose one, you lose all. And you are truly tapped out.

Have a nice trip.

Britain's 'unchain chain' offers time machines

Shakespeare Hotel in Straford-upon-Avon

By PETER TONGE

NEW YORK, N.Y. — When Connecticut residents Jim and Alice Fixx tour Britain, which they do with some regularity, they make use of a "time machine" and return to the days of Henry VIII, Elizabeth I, William and Mary—and virtually every other sovereign up to Queen Victoria.

Put very simply, they stay at quality hotels and inns that date back down the centuries; hostelries that have been maintained in, or brought back to, their original authentic state—with the addition of modern plumbing, central heating and such niceties as innerspring mattresses rather than the straw-and-feathers stuffing of the past.

The "time machine" in this instance is Trust Houses Forte, one of the more unusual hotel chains in the world. It well might be dubbed the "unchain chain," for no two hotels are alike. Indeed, in many of the hotels no two rooms are alike, either.

There is a reason for this: While some hotels in the chain are modern, the bulk of them in the British Isles, including Ireland, go back many centuries to the days of the stagecoach, when the light at the end of the road meant welcome warmth, good food and rest for the travellers of the day.

These hostelries thrived and increased in number over the centuries until the comparatively recent arrival of steam power and that most impressive people mover of all time—the train. Gradually the railroad replaced the highway for cross-country travel and the need for stagecoach resting places dropped away. Many of the centuries-old hostelries were left to tumble into ruin until in 1904 an association, forerunner of the present Trust Houses Forte group, was founded to rescue the British inn from near oblivion.

Over the years the group acquired and restored inns that date from the 19th century all the way back to the 11th century. In the process historically important hotels, other than inns, were acquired and renovated as well. Said Howard Fine, who heads up Trust Houses Forte Hotels, Inc., here: "The original form of architecture was strictly adhered to in all these buildings. All we did was put in modern plumbing. . . as discreetly as possible."

In many instances, restoration has erased some rather pathetic attempts at modernization and returned authenticity, even elegance, to the buildings. What long had been looked on as plain plastered walls in the lobby of London's Hyde Park Hotel (one of the THF group) was found to be beautiful marble once the white paint had been stripped away. Paint remover also restored elegance to nearby woodwork.

In some other inns, suspended ceilings had been installed to hide the worn, heavy oak beams that had stood the test of centuries. In an era when many people now glue plastic beams to a ceiling to re-create the warmth of the past, hiding the authentic in this fashion seemed almost obscene, according to Fine.

The net effect of all this restoration is that "the experience (in a Trust Houses hotel) is genuine as opposed to the make-believe of Disney," according to Mrs. Fixx. In addition, the hotels are filled with period furniture and genuine English antiques. "I know because I collect antiques," said Mrs. Fixx.

But it is the "time machine" aspect of touring Britain that appeals most to Mrs. Fixx, whose husband, Jim, is best known as the author of the best-selling book, The Complete Book of Running.

"We would be staying at a 15th-century inn one night, a Victorian hotel the next and be checking in at a castle on the third day. Each stop would have something uniquely different to offer," said Mrs. Fixx.

You can book in at Trust Houses Forte hotels through any travel agent or in British Columbia, calling collect (416) 595-1507.

Why the Hyatt Regency Vancouver and the Bayshore Inn have cut winter rates by one-third.

December through March are pleasantly mild winter months in Vancouver. They are also our "slow" months. So, to encourage your visit, we're offering a splendid inducement: one-third off our usual room rates.

With all due respect to the Bayshore, we believe the Hyatt Regency offers even more of an inducement than our friends up the road.

Because their special winter rate gets you a luxurious room with a beautiful view at a fine hotel out near tranquil Stanley Park. But our special winter rate gets you a luxurious room with a beautiful view at a fine hotel right in the heart of exciting downtown Vancouver. So you're steps—not taxi rides — from the city's best shopping, nightlife, restaurants, galleries, theatres and business addresses. And, because our room rates are priced a little lower than the Bayshore's year-round, one-third off ours is less expensive than one-third off theirs. Come discover Vancouver in winter. The only thing "off-season" about us is the price!

Arms-running charges loom

TORONTO (UPC) — The federal justice department intends to charge employees of Space Research Corp. of Montreal with conspiracy to send arms illegally to South Africa, according to the Globe and Mail.

"Our investigation is still ongoing," Saturday's Globe quoted RCMP customs and excise investigations head Inspector Donald Docker as saying, "but only to the extent that they (investigators) are tying up a few loose ends."

The Globe said it interviewed a senior official of Space Research, who asked not to be identified.

The official acknowledged that some artillery shells manufactured by the company could have wound up in South Africa, but denied that a conspiracy had been involved or that Space Research had intended the shells to arrive in South Africa.

"But what if they did?" the Space Research official said. "Who really cares?

"They're not for use against the blacks in South Africa, but for defence against the Communists who want to attack south Africa from outside the country."

The 2½-year investigation took investigators to the United States, Antigua, Barbados, England, France, West Germany and Spain.

It centred on allegations that Space Research circumvented Canada's Export and Import Permits Act in 1977 and 1978 by shipping 155-millimeter shells, howitzers and associated knowledge to South Africa.

Space Research was founded by Canadian-born Gerald Bull, now a U.S. citizen. The company's main facilities straddle the U.S.-Canada border at Highwater, Que.

The RCMP investigation began in October, 1977, when Rhodesian black leader Joshua Nkomo, in Ottawa, charged that arms were being shipped from Canada to South Africa via Antigua.

The Globe said that a ship called the Tugelaland was shown by port documents to be taking shells from Canada to Space Research facilities in Antigua. But the ship, partly owned by the South African government, sailed for South Africa on at least two occasions after stopping in Antigua but failing to unload the shells it carried.

The newspaper also said two other shipments of shells, ostensibly intended for the government of Spain, had apparently wound up in South Africa.

Soviets tap gov't reports: paper

EDMONTON (CP) — The Journal quotes RCMP sources as saying sophisticated electronic surveillance gear in the Soviet embassy in Ottawa is allowing the Russians to tap top-secret Canadian government communications.

The newspaper reported today that RCMP intelligence officers believe the Soviets are capable of eavesdropping on the force itself as well as on highly confidential federal cabinet communications and the national defence department.

If true, the techniques attained by the Soviets represent a major breakthrough for them and a devastating attack on Canada's security, the newspaper says.

"There's no doubt they are doing it," a source said. "And there's no doubt that they know we know they are doing it. Naturally they know we are fighting a ceaseless war to cut them off everywhere we can."

RCMP security service officials are so worried and alarmed by the new Soviet capability that they are in constant battle to shield government communications from Soviet eyes, the newspaper says.

But a top source close to the cloak-and-dagger world says it's a battle that Canadian anti-espionage teams have already probably lost.

Much of the fight against Soviet eavesdropping in Canada involves changing telephone numbers, radio frequencies and codes used in sensitive and classified government communications.

But the Soviets are believed to be expert in tracking switches in communications techniques. By scanning and sweeping in on new frequencies, Canada's spycatchers believe Soviet experts are often only days behind in discovering any changes.

"It may sound like out-of-this-world fantasy, but unfortunately it's right down to earth," says an officer.

Prof. John Carroll of the University of Western Ontario, an expert in computer technology who has no connection with the security services, told a recent communications conference in Toronto that sophisticated spy techniques are less difficult than they may seem.

He said a small truck parked on an Ottawa street could easily contain equipment capable of intercepting classified government messages, sensitive manpower information and even individual income-tax returns.

All these types of information travel on long-distance telephone lines. Both Canadian phone lines and space satellites are "dangerously unguarded," Carroll said.

Long-distance calls are transmitted along microwave beams, which are relatively easy to intercept, he said.

Intelligence officers say anybody with $5,000 can buy an electronic disc-shaped device that can literally pull down any type of information from communications satellites circling the globe.

RCMP say an embassy as elaborately outfitted as the Soviet headquarters on Charlotte Street in Ottawa can do much more damage.

In February, 1978, Canada expelled 13 Soviet diplomats from Ottawa for a large number of offences including trying to infiltrate the RCMP security service.

In 1945, embassy cipher clerk Igor Gouzenko defected to the RCMP from the Ottawa embassy and revealed the existence of a vast Soviet spy network operating in Canada and throughout the Western world.

Earlier this year, then external affairs minister Flora MacDonald expelled three Soviet diplomats for allegedly using the Ottawa embassy as a base to steal U.S. military secrets.

"The Ottawa embassy has always been a place of perfidious treachery and we don't expect it to change," an RCMP official told The Journal.

"Really, we are fighting a guerrilla war here. They try one thing, we find out and ambush them. Then they move onto another. We put a stop to that.

"However, when it comes to electronic spying, things move into the abstract. There is nothing concrete. We can't catch someone with the evidence in his pocket. All we can do is try and stay one step ahead."

Majority set to vote no

MONTREAL (CP) — A public opinion poll conducted for Radio-Canada indicates the number of Quebecers planning to vote no to sovereignty-association has grown dramatically in recent months and now totals about 52 per cent.

The latest poll, conducted on behalf of the French network of the CBC by the Montreal-based Centre de Recherche sur l'Opinion Publique, was conducted in the closing weeks of January and early in February, during the federal election campaign.

It showed that about 52 per cent of respondents would vote no in the spring referendum on sovereignty-association. Some 41 per cent said they would vote yes, while seven per cent were undecided.

In the last poll conducted for Radio-Canada, about three months ago, only 31 per cent of respondents said they would vote no. As in the latest poll, 41 per cent said they would vote yes. Another 28 per cent said they were undecided at that time.

A comparison of the two polls appears to indicate the no forces have picked up most of the previously undecided vote, while the percentage in favor of sovereignty-association has remained constant.

Austerity means welfare squeeze

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Britain faces the same problems as Canada in trying to maintain a wide range of social services in the face of economic austerity, Professor Robert Pinker of the London School of Economics said here Friday.

In an interview, the acknowledged expert on British social welfare policy said the professionals in the field have a difficult job in trying to keep the budget axe from biting too deeply and falling heavily on those least able to bear the blow.

He was fresh from lecturing social work students at the University of Victoria at the end of a three-week tour of six Canadian universities, made possible by a grant from the Koerner foundation.

The conservative, cost-cutting tendencies in governments everywhere are bringing out more critics of the system, Pinker admitted, but he said there are very few people on social assistance who wouldn't rather be working.

In fact, he said the bulk of the studies on the subject show many people wait too long before requesting government assistance.

"There always will be a small minority of people with a marked preference for idleness," Pinker said.

Told of the famous example Ronald Reagan cites on his U.S. presidential campaign, the Chicago "welfare queen" who picks up her cheques in a Cadillac, he replied:

"We have this. Every society has its folklores on this."

It's important to remember that they are a small percentage of those on social assistance, Pinker said. And the cost of pursuing them is probably greater than the amount of fraud.

"By the same token, a lot of decent people who are on social assistance become stigmatized, with the idea in the public mind that social assistance is for scroungers."

Britain has tried to develop the belief that the forms of public assistance are an attribute of citizenship, a right for everyone.

PINKER
. . . few prefer idleness

"It takes a long time to build that up," he said, but a short time to destroy it.

The British system of social assistance is a mixture of national and county programs. Public housing provides shelter for a third of the population in the UK, Pinker said, much higher than Canada. It is administered at the county level.

The national government plans legislation which would allow tenants to purchase their council houses as a test of the new Tory government's determination to put more public housing in the private sector.

Pinker said the government's is making it quite attractive to do so — a 30 per cent discount off market value, 50 per cent if the tenant has lived there 30 years or longer.

Social assistance, or welfare, is administered by the national government. The department of health and social security operates regional and local offices from which the National Health Service, unemployment insurance and supplementary benefits — "supben" in the English jargon — are administered jointly.

There is no separation between welfare (a provincial responsibility here) and unemployment insurance (which is federal) as there is in Canada.

It's difficult to compare benefit levels, but the most recent social assistance rates, announced in the UK in November, provide a single person with about $250 a month. The B.C. rate for a single individual, which was set last April, is $295 a month.

But Britain provides a wider range of services. Dental care, drug prescriptions and eyeglasses are included under the national health plan (although there is a $1.20 service charge for prescriptions).

There's a small private sector in health care, but double billing which is the subject of controversy between the federal and provincial governments in Canada, is unknown.

Pinker first heard of the practice in Alberta on his tour. In Britain, "you go either as a private patient or as a public patient — there is no mixing." Private patients pay their bills themselves, public patients are covered under the NHS.

A dry year faces herring nets as fishermen reject latest offer

Hopes for settlement of a strike that has crippled this year's herring roe fishery were dashed Friday night when union fishermen voted 71 per cent to reject another price offer from fishing companies.

Members of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and the Native Brotherhood of B.C. rejected an offer of $650 a ton for gillnet-caught fish and $350 a ton for seine-caught herring.

In making the offer, the Fisheries Association of B.C., which represents 13 major processors, said it was not prepared to offer any more money because Japanese consumers would not even pay last year's retail price for herring roe.

Last year, Japanese consumers boycotted the delicacy when it reached $45 a pound.

UFAWU president Jack Nichol said the vote seems to eliminate the possibility of any union boats dropping their nets this year.

No new negotiations are scheduled and Nichol said the fishermen and the association are a long way apart.

The union was asking $1,400 a ton for gillnetters and $850 a ton for seiners.

Earlier Friday, the federal fisheries department indefinitely suspended the herring season for gillnetters.

Packer ships collecting the herring catch from the gillnetter fleet had nowhere to dump their rotting cargoes because the strike halted operations at processing plants.

Fisheries spokesman Rudy Haugeneder said herring fishing openings for the smaller seiner fleet will continue to be called until packer boats for that fleet reach capacity.

About half of the gillnetter fleet, which numbers about 1,300 vessels, are represented by the union. There are about 250 seiners.

Meanwhile in Victoria, Mr. Justice John Bouck of the B.C. Supreme Court granted an injunction Friday prohibiting the picketing by union fishermen of Oakland Fisheries Ltd. of Victoria and Victoria Packing and Cold Storage Ltd.

Members of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union had been picketing the companies' facilities during the week and the companies maintained the action was causing economic hardship.

Oakland had been particularly concerned because a truck delivering much-needed salt had been stopped by the pickets and a barge containing 150 tons of roe herring was being held behind picket lines in Esperanza Inlet on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Oakland president Ned Easton said in an interview the company was concerned that the load would be wasted.

He also said he is not that concerned about a federal fisheries closure Friday of the herring fishery for gillnetters, which have been the only vessels fishing to date. The seine fishery hasn't been opened yet.

So far, he said, the fishing has been excellent with the roe count high in some areas.

Only three areas have been opened for gillnet fishing — Winter Harbor in Quatsino Sound, Esperanza Inlet and an area around Denman and Hornby Islands in the Gulf of Georgia.

The major spawning areas in the gulf and around Barkley Sound on the west coast of the Island were expected to be opened soon. But the fishery closure Friday casts some doubt on that assumption.

Fisheries said the move was made to prevent the waste of herring which were caught in the nets but unable to be taken from the grounds due to a lack of packers or picketing of processing plants by union members.

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

THUNDERBOLTS AT THE BOARD

"Modern chess play is dynamic. Today's masters are willing to accept a permanent structural weakness for a temporary gain in time or space. Such a decision makes the position charged with tension. The energy in the game is released, like a thunderbolt, when the positive and negative features ("charges") clash. This was uncommon in the last century, because the Classical School stressed only the static elements. The complications are hidden, but can be found by thinking of the weaknesses and strengths of each strategical decision." — U.S. Master John Peters.

Vive la difference: French feminist strike flops

PARIS (UPI) — Feminist groups in France urged women Friday to give up work, use no makeup, stop smiling and avoid sex in a one-day strike to protest sexual inequalities in the land of "vive la difference."

By all appearances, the strike was a resounding flop.

No unusual absences of female workers were reported at department stores and other businesses contacted around Paris.

A clerk at one of the city's "cinq-a-sept" hotels — the slang name given for hotels where Frenchmen meet their mistresses between the hours of 5 and 7 p.m. — said tersely: "There's no women's strike going on around here."

"It's totally ridiculous," said Marielle-Danielle Claviez-Homberg, a Paris office worker. "There's certainly sexual discrimination in France but not putting on lipstick or not making love is no way to call attention to the problem."

Mrs. Claviez-Homberg said she knew of no friends who heeded the strike call, which was unprecedented in the history of France.

"But that's only because we found this strike so insignificant that we never even mentioned it between each other," she said.

"Nobody told me about it," said Paris secretary Nicole Leroux. "I went to the movies last night, so didn't listen to the news. Maybe that's why I didn't hear about it."

Huguette Bouchardeau, one of the organizers of the strike, said it was not designed to bring a halt to the French working world. Rather, she said, it was to show that striking was a means of calling attention to the problems of women.

"In the office, in the kitchen or in bed, we are no longer going to present an annoyed air," she said.

"On the contrary, we will cry out loudly — proclaiming and baptizing the strike."

El Salvador seizes banks in move to shore up junta

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — The Salvadorean junta nationalized the country's domestic banks and restricted the operations of five foreign banks in the second step of a long-awaited plan to reform the country and build support for the government.

Police, meanwhile, announced Friday they have found the bodies of 30 more persons shot to death, bringing to at least 77 the number of persons killed here this week in political violence.

Twenty of the bodies were found on rural roads north and south of the capital. The other 10 were found beside streets and in parks in San Salvador, the capital. Earlier this week, 27 bodies were found in and around the capital.

Although police have not identified most of the victims and no group has claimed responsibility for the killings, there is speculation that most, if not all, were suspected leftists slain by right-wing death squads.

El Salvador has been plagued by political violence for years, and it has increased since a military coup ousted the right-wing government of Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero on Oct. 15 and established a military-civilian junta.

The junta's bank-nationalization plan came one day after the government announced a sweeping land-reform program for this Central American country with a population of 3.5 million. The land scheme will divide large farms among thousands of hitherto landless peasants. The farm owners are to be paid off with government bonds.

Exercise mill built for fish

LONDON (UPI) — Tubby trout and flabby flounder, look out. A team of researchers at St. Andrews University in Scotland says even fish need to fight the fat and cut that girth around the gills.

So they've come up with the ideal exercise for fish: swimming.

A team from the Physiology Department has built a water tunnel that forces a fish to maintain its position against an artificial current.

"What we are doing is the equivalent of a human being taking up jogging or cycling," said Dr. Ian Johnston, head of the researchers. "If we can keep them swimming in a steady stream of water, we can promote better muscle developments, which in turn means better quality flesh."

Actually, the bodybuilding experiments have a serious purpose, Johnston said — to advance medical knowledge and improve techniques for comercial fish farming.

Hostage talks snag in Bogota

BOGOTA (AP) — Efforts to free the hostages held at the Dominican Republic's embassy appeared stalemated today after a third round of face-to-face talks did not yield a compromise between the Colombian government and the guerrillas holding the captives.

As in the previous negotiations since the embassy was seized 10 days ago, the talks Friday took place in a van parked near the front of the building. The rear doors of the van have been removed so the guerrillas inside the embassy can watch the goings-on.

Once again, a woman, her head masked by a hood, represented the guerrillas. She was accompanied by Mexican Ambassador Ricardo Galan, one of the 14 ambassadors and acting ambassadors still held hostage along with at least a dozen other captives. Galan appears to be acting as a go-between.

Deputy Foreign Ministers Camilio Jimenez and Ramiro Zambrano again spoke for the government in the one-hour 13-minute session, the shortest to date.

A government statement said the officials "presented a detailed layout of the government contentions and for her part the representative of the occupants of the diplomatic seat reiterated those (demands) of her group."

The statement said talks will resume sometime next week.

Observers said the talks appear to be snagged on the guerrillas' demand that the government release 311 persons the militants say are political prisoners. The government says the 311 persons are not political prisoners, but were jailed for civil crimes.

Uniroyal recalls two million tires

WASHINGTON (AP) — Uniroyal Tire Co. will recall about two million steel-belted radial tires in the United States because they have been failing at an unacceptable rate, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported today.

Affected are 1975, 1976 and 1977 models.

It is the second-largest tire recall in U.S. history, topped only by the 1978 recall of 10 million Firestone 500 steel-belted radials.

There have been reports of 386 accidents and 96 injuries associated with the failures.

The recall covers 1975-1976 model Zeta 40 PR5 tires, sizes LR78-15 and HR78-15; 1975 TPC PR6 tires, size BR78-13; 1977 Zeta 40 PR6 tires, size HR78-15, and private and allied brands made by the company which are essentially the same as the Uniroyal label.

The private and allied brands include these steel-belted models: Diplomat, Gillette, Peerless, Fisk, Delta Radial II, Delta Victorian Radial and Radial II, Delta Durasteel, K-Mart's KM Radial and KM Radial SSK, Coop Mark 74 and Mark X, Sonic Dual, Exxon 78, Traveller and Big O Radial II.

Firemen end strike

CHICAGO (AP) — About 4,000 striking firefighters early today ratified an interim agreement to resume full fire protection for the second-largest U.S. city — 23 days and 22 deaths since the first such strike in the history of Chicago began.

Unanimous ratification of the agreement came shortly after midnight following marathon bargaining sessions mediated by Rev. Jesse Jackson, leader of the self-help organization Operation PUSH.

Also, he'll be a secure person because a Persian rug is a good saleable item in these inflation-ridden times. [illegible] It is easier to sell expensive Oriental carpets today in a sluggish economy than it was in the 1950s and 60s, although the average price of an authentic Oriental carpet has greatly increased in recent years. An Oriental rug is an excellent hedge against inflation because its value increases constantly. The reason for this is the increased wealth and industrialization of Mid-East countries. [illegible] and master artists are leaving their traditional work and are entering industrial employment, in addition the Government of Iran has introduced compulsory education thereby effectively eliminating the employment of children in rug weaving, says Ejaz Khan of Bokhara Carpet Palace. TEHRAN (UPI) — Emboldened by chants of "don't let them go" from thousands of young Iranians, Islamic militants today refused to turn over the 50 American hostages to Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh.

Calling Ghotbzadeh's assertion that Ayatollah Khomeini authorized him to take custody of the hostages a "tissue of lies," the militants said they would not abide by their own deadline — 5 p.m. local time — for handing over the captives until the Revolutionary Council named someone else for the task.

The council was to meet this evening to decide who is to take custody of hostages from the students.

Ghotbzadeh, in an apparent attempt to salvage credibility, said in a Tehran Radio broadcast: "Responsibility for taking delivery of the hostages has been entrusted to me, and in order to carry out the decision of the Revolutionary Council and to solve the present crisis, I shall go to the den of espionage."

He said that turning over the hostages to the council "is under no circumstances aimed at their release." He said Khomeini had entrusted that task to Iran's yet-to-be-elected parliament.

Chanting "don't let them go," some 4,000 Iranian demonstrators massed in front of the embassy's heavily chained iron gates to form a human wall to prevent Ghotbzadeh from entering the compound.

"So far the Ayatollah Khomeini has not given us a direct order to let the American spies go," a militant at the embassy said.

In their own statement to Tehran radio, the militants said:

"According to information which has reached us, the published report quoting Ghotbzadeh pertaining to the Imam's command on the handing over of the hostages is a tissue of lies.

"We regret that we cannot hand over the hostages to the foreign minister. It is essential, therefore, for the Revolutionary Council to officially appoint another representative to take delivery of the hostages," the statement added.

Ghotbzadeh said Friday the captives would be moved to a secret location in Tehran for questioning by a UN panel investigating the regime of the deposed shah.

Tehran Radio announced that Khomeini had turned over the entire issue of the hostages — not just the custody matter — to the foreign ministry.

The students said they will not leave the U.S. Embassy complex because "they have more revelations to make" from documents they have found in the embassy.

Meanwhile, saboteurs have blown up three more oil pipelines in southwestern Iran, bringing the number of pipes exploded since Wednesday to nine, the official Pars news agency reported today.

Quoting oil company sources in the oil-producing Khuzestan province, the agency said a 45-centimetre pipe carrying oil from Ahwaz to Abadan caught fire Friday after a bomb explosion. The fire was later brought under control.

Pars said a 50-cm and a 30-cm pipe north of Ahwaz were blown up Friday night, starting a fire which so far was not under control.

Some MDs refusing to stamp 'pain in the neck' sick forms

By MIKE HUGHES

B.C. doctors are no longer going to rubber-stamp sickness certificates for employees or school children.

The doctors have adopted a new policy which states they will not sign certificates of disability unless they have been dealing with a patient for five days or know for a fact the person has been ill for that length of time.

In the past employees or parents have asked doctors to sign sick slips stating they or their children had been sick for a period of time. The doctors were signing the slips even though they had not been consulted in the case nor did they know for a fact the person had been sick for that period.

Some doctors are following the new regulation but others have dismissed it as being unworkable.

The B.C. Federation of Labor is concerned that the five-day regulation will cause serious problems.

Language in many union contracts gives the employer the right to request a doctor's certificate when an employee is off sick.

But many workers have not been consulting a doctor as soon as they get the flu or some minor illness which initially doesn't seem that serious.

Dr. Mel Petreman, president of the B.C. Medical Association, said in an interview Friday the new policy was adopted because doctors were being inundated with requests for illness certificates.

"Physicians were more and more ending up to be monitors for employers asking for certificates from their employees," he said.

The problem is, Petreman explained, often times a doctor is asked for a certificate without really knowing whether the person has been sick or not.

"He has to take the patient's word for it."

The new policy of demanding that the doctor be involved in the case for a period of five days stems from a study on absenteeism by the Canadian Medical Association.

The national doctors' body recommended the new policy to the provincial groups. The B.C. Medical Association approved it at a Jan. 12 meeting.

The exact wording of the new policy:

Space visitors miss their cue

RIO DE JANIERO (AP) — About 50,000 Brazilians hoping for a close encounter with a space ship from Jupiter jammed onto a farm near Rio today, only to have their expectations dashed when the predicted dawn arrival time came and went without a sign of Jovian visitors.

Word of the forthcoming "visit" had been hot news in this nation of 120 million since last weekend when a Brazilian farmer told a national television audience he had learned by "telepathy" that the space ship from Jupiter would be landing on his farm today at 5:20 a.m.

Interviewed earlier on one of Brazil's most popular TV talks shows, the farmer said the people from Jupiter were coming to return a Brazilian helicopter pilot snatched in 1976. Indeed, a chopper pilot disappeared mysteriously on a flight off Brazil's Atlantic coast in that year.

Edilicio Barbosa, the farmer and long-time UFO aficionado, was no where to be seen today.

Boys try bank job

Two boys aged 12 and 15 are in the Duncan RCMP lockup charged with attempting to rob a bank Friday morning.

A police spokesman said the pair entered the Bank of Montreal on Canada Way at 10:35 a.m. and handed Debbie Sherwood, a clerk in the loan department, a note which read: 'I got a gun. Act normal or I'll shoot. Give me all the money.'

The spokesman said Sherwood was so dumbfounded she hesitated, and the would-be robbers panicked and fled.

Police searched the area and found the suspects in a pool hall about half a block from the bank.

The boys have been remanded in custody.

Former prosecutors deny Vogel interfered

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two lawyers who acted as Crown counsel in the court case of a Kootenay lawyer said Friday that deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel did not attempt to influence them.

Brian Nattrass, one of the lawyers, described the allegation as ludicrous and said a CBC reporter disregarded his denial of the charge.

Nattrass and Robert Moffat were commenting on allegations in a CBC report that Vogel "influenced or tried to influence the course of justice" in the case of lawyer Mickey Moran, charged with impaired driving at Christina Lake near Grand Forks.

In the Moran case, the CBC said Vogel called a local prosecutor and suggested that a charge of dangerous driving be added to charges if impaired driving and refusing a breath test.

The report said the prosecution then dropped the first two charges and Moran pleaded guilty to dangerous driving. He was given an absolute discharge as a result of the March 14, 1978, accident.

Nattrass, now in private practice here, said he was employed in the Crown counsel's office in Nelson when the Moran case began.

"My function was to look at the RCMP circumstance sheet and then at the charges laid to make sure the right charges had been laid, that the facts were there to support the charges," he said.

"I looked at the circumstance sheet on the Moran case and saw that two charges had been laid — impaired and refusing the breathalyser test. Mickey was very well known in the area as a criminal lawyer. I wanted to be sure that the Is were dotted and the Ts were crossed. Because of the circumstances on the sheet I felt that the facts would support a charge of dangerous driving."

Nattrass said he contacted the regional Crown counsel in Kelowna and received approval to lay the additional charge.

"At no time did I have any input from Vogel or anyone in his office. It is patently untrue to suggest that anything like that happened."

Nattrass said CBC reporter Chris Bird contacted him three weeks ago and showed him his script which said Vogel phoned a local prosecutor and suggested the addition of a dangerous driving charge.

"The reporter asked me if this was true and I said no. I said to him 'you're going to be in trouble if you put this in because it isn't true.' The CBC is trying to create something that is non-existent."

Meanwhile, Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber suggested in the legislature Friday if Vogel interfered as alleged in three court cases, why not in a fourth.

The fourth case is that of Bill Ritchie, Socred MLA for Central Fraser Valley, who was cleared of influence-peddling allegations last December despite RCMP and Crown counsel recommendations that charges be laid.

How high can interest rates go?

By
JENNIFER LEWINGTON

OTTAWA (CP) — How high can interest rates go? Over the last year, as rates climbed beyond forecasts, borrowers and depositers have had good reason to wonder.

Mortgage rates are currently 14.5 per cent, making the monthly interest charge $605 on a $50,000 house for a 25-year period. A year ago the cost was $482.

The monthly cost today of a $5,000 car loan at 16 per cent interest, repaid over three years, is $176. A year ago, at 13 per cent, the cost was $169.

Today, a one-year term deposit of $5,000 earns 12 per cent for a yearly interest payment of $600. Last July a depositer earned 8.75 per cent for a return of $437.50.

All those figures will move up if the Bank of Canada, as some predict, soon raises the bank rate — the key to interest charges in the economy — from the present record high level of 14 per cent.

For the last three weeks, the bank has resisted, despite rate increases in the U.S. which have pushed interest rate levels there well ahead of those in this country. The private rate in Canada is 15 per cent compared to 17.25 per cent in the U.S.

Normally, that would cause an outflow of money from Canada, thereby lowering the value of the dollar and forcing the bank to raise interest rates and attract money back in.

But an unexpectedly strong inflow of capital — lured by prospects of major oil discoveries off the East Coast — has rushed to invest in oil and gas companies on the Canadian stock market, pushing the value of the dollar beyond the mid-87-cent U.S. level.

The Toronto stock market continued to plummet Friday as investors worried about rising interest rates cashed in their stocks.

The TSE 300 index sank 50.81 points to 2045.71, just a day after plunging 69.31 points, its worst daily drop on record. The declines erased gains made during the last three weeks, pushing the index roughly to the level it was at Feb. 15.

Now, the dollar began to tumble in the last few days to the low 86-cent level, an indication the bank may have to defend the dollar and attract foreign capital by raising interest rates.

Efforts to predict what will happen to rates have proved unrewarding for the last year as economists and others guessed incorrectly.

But economists agree on one thing: There is no set limit to how high rates can

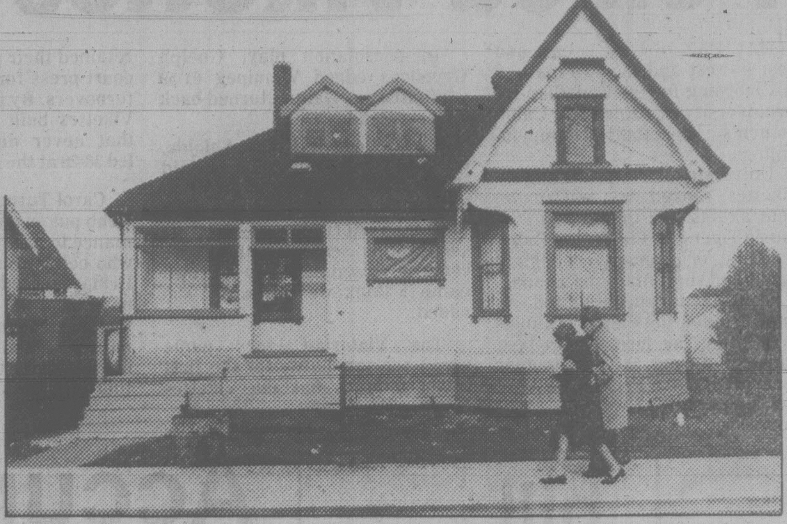
$60,000 joint effort on Simcoe house



'Late Victorian picturesque' is the style of Jackson home

By NORMAN GIDNEY

The provincial heritage trust has approved an involved $60,000 rescue plan in which half a dozen private groups and government agencies are co-operating to save an 80-year-old house in James Bay from demolition.

It is so far the most sophisticated method by which a heritage building has been preserved and it could establish a precedent where a "revolving fund" is used to save other threatened structures.

The trust last week endorsed the scheme to move the so-called Jackson house at 522 Simcoe to a vacant lot on nearby Parry Street, now a government employees' parking lot owned by the B.C. Buildings Corporation.

The Hallmark Society, a local organization dedicated to preserving historic buildings, hopes to restore the old home. It plans to move its library and archives there and make the house a demonstration project in preservation techniques, president Stuart Stark said.

At the same time, the move will allow the James Bay Multi-level Care Society to proceed with its $1.9-million intermediate care home on property surrounding the old home.

It announced plans for the 70-bed home last year but the city held up a demolition permit until a way could be found to keep the house.

The heritage trust — a perpetual fund endowed by the provincial government — is acting as middleman in the transaction. Under the agreement negotiated by vice-chairman Mike Young, formerly mayor of Victoria, the Hallmark Society will get first chance to buy the house and property when it has the money, sometime in the next 12 months.

Until then, BCBC will hold title to the $35,000 lot in escrow, Young said. The trust is putting up about $25,000 to move the house, build a new foundation and reconnect water, sewer and electrical sevices. The work will be supervised by the heritage conservation branch in the Provincial Secretary's ministry and charged later to Hallmark.

It plans a public campaign to gather the necessary funds to pay for the takeover and restoration, said Don Reksten, chairman of the society's Heritage Building Foundation. Donations may be sent to P.O. Box 1204, Victoria.

Once it has assumed the mortgage, the foundation plans to rent out suites in the basement and on the second floor, with the rent hopefully balancing the mortgage payments.

Young said the Provincial Capital Commission still must approve the plan, since the new site is government-owned property within the general Legislative Buildings precinct where it controls development. It may decide to retain ownership of the lot on Parry, Young said.

Heritage buffs will have the use of the main floor of the Jackson house for their files and extensive library, which will be open to the public, and for public meeting space.

Hallmark established the foundation for just such a purpose three years ago but it hasn't been able to raise any funds.

It has played a key role in generating public support in the 1970s to save many heritage buildings in Victoria but 522 Simcoe will be its first direct attempt at rescuing a house.

"The move itself we hope will take place in the middle of March," Stark said.

The house is not designated as a heritage dwelling by city council (which would prohibit demolition or exterior alteration), although it is on the primary list and is considered part of the city's "outstanding residential heritage."

It's a fairly typical James Bay house, Stark said. Late Victorian picturesque is the general description of the style. The house was built about 1901 for Richard Jackson, manager of the insurance division of B.C. Land and Insurance Co.

"Ornamentation is elaborate but suppressed to single configurations and abstract sunburst designs in the gable and brackets," said the city's catalogue of heritage houses, This Old House.

"Particularly unusual is the hint of art nouveau in the gabled bargeboard profiles."

Stark said the original house was altered over the years, with the addition of a big dormer at the back during the 1920s. The front porch also was closed in. He said Hallmark will try to restore the house as closely as possible to its original condition and design.

by jake banky

So you think the scenes inside and outside the house this week were shocking. Not at all top-drawer. Simply not done. Damned poor show.

Well, compared to the peccadilloes of our political predecessors it was a mere fleabite on the legislative rump.

Thumbing through the yellowed, crumbly newsprint of an 80-year-old copy of the Times we come across a situation that would cause any political reporter to have palpitations.

I can only pay respect in retrospect to the polite restraint of the unidentified journalist who wrote the account of "The Opposition's Attempt to Steal Mr. Joseph Martin's Seat."

Back in 1900 Joe Martin and Richard McBride were rival opposition leaders. Both felt they had the right to claim the seat of the official leader of the opposition.

On the day in question, while the Rev. Canon Beanlands was saying prayers, the two leaders and their followers began edging in on the coveted chair. Now read on:

"As the last word of the Lord's prayer was uttered, Mr. Curtis seized Mr. Martin around the neck and tried to drag him away.

"Mr. Houston and Mr. Gilmour came to Mr. Martin's assistance and Messrs. McPhillips, McBride and Curtis struggled with them for possession of the chair in which Mr. Martin managed to retain himself during the fracas.

"The galleries howled with delight as the contestants swung to and fro and cheers went up when it was seen that 'Fighting Joe' had carried his point.

"The speaker called repeatedly for order and only succeeded in securing quiet by threatening to clear the galleries.

"Finally, when order was restored, Mr. Martin sat in his accustomed place while Mr. McBride sat on the desk in front of him."

The Times reporter paid lip service to the "fundamental principles of parliamentary procedure" but clearly he was gratified by Martin's victory. Everybody loves a winner.

Anyhow, both Martin and McBride went on to become premiers of this fair province.

Those were the days. At least the politicians knew what they were fighting about — a chance to sit down. Nowadays the issues are more obscure.

Arthur Elworthy, head of the B.C. Steamship Co., has come out of the closet. It turns out he's a Maggie-lover after all. Unfortunately his conversion comes too late.

The government has based its decision to mothball the Princess Marguerite on what Elworthy was saying 18 months ago. It's too late to admit change now, petitions notwithstanding.

There may be some sight satisfaction in the likelihood that Elworthy will go down with his ship.

It was Elworthy who first began promoting the idea of replacing the Marguerite. He had his eye on the palatial Queen of Surrey for the Victoria-Seattle service. In fact he was counting on it.

The government's decision to dump the Maggie was based on Elworthy's one-sided interpretation of some rather inadequate engineering reports.

That decision was reinforced by Elworthy's threat last August to resign if the Marguerite ran even one more season.

But much to Arthur's chagrin, the Queen of Surrey was committed to the mid-coast service and B.C. Steamship ended up with the cold leftover, the ugly duckling, the woefully inadequate Queen of Prince Rupert.

Sudden conversion. Flash of light. Elworthy becomes a born-again Maggie-pusher.

Nothing wrong with the old girl a little money couldn't cure, he says. Best ship for the run. Save the princess. Damn the politicians, full speed ahead!

[illegible] Transportation Minister Alex Fraser, a heardheaded Cariboo farm implement dealer who knows a worn-out widget when he sees one, does not get sentimental about old cruise ships. He has made his decision and he is sticking to it, come Elworthy of high water.

Tough luck Maggie.
Goodbye Arthur.

Propane car 'kicking' safe - engineer

There is no danger in CP Rail's practice of "kicking" loaded propane cars across the Johnson Street bridge, city engineer John Sansom said Friday.

After an explanation by railway officials, Sansom said he is satisfied the practice is safe.

The term "kicking" sounds alarming, but the cars are under control while they are crossing the bridge, he said.

CP Rail has followed a self-imposed weight limit for about a year, when the city began repairs to the old bridge, but Sansom said it was never in any danger of collapse even from the combined 200-ton weight of a propane car and a locomotive.

However, the city did impose a speed limit of five miles an hour for rail traffic while the repairs were being made. It used to be 15.

"The slower the better," Sansom said.

The bridge can better support a heavy load if it is moved slowly across than if it is pushed quickly.

When CP Rail "kicks" the cars across, the engine does not ram the car and bump it across. The engine pushes the car to the bridge, then releases it. A brakeman remains aboard to control it.

"It just creeps across at about one mile an hour," Sansom said.

Tremor rattles up-island

An earthquake centred in Strathcona Provincial Park shook north central Vancouver Island Friday afternoon, rattling cups and shaking buildings in Tahsis and Gold River on the west coast and Campbell River to the east.

The 1:36 p.m. quake registered five on the Richter scale.

A telephone operator in Campbell River said she was washing dishes when the quake struck.

"I really felt that (the quake) and I'm in Campbell River," she said.

She said windows were shaking and dishes rattling.

She didn't know what had happened until she got to work and she heard others talking about it.

In Tahsis Hospital, the quake was felt as two shocks, each lasting about five seconds. There was no damage.

A Pacific Geoscience Centre spokesman in Victoria confirmed there had been more than a tremor and that there were two shocks, each lasting several minutes.

"It was an earthquake, all right, bigger than the one under Pender Island four years ago," he said.

But residents would have felt the shocks for only a few seconds, as the centre's instruments record the tremors as they progress through the earth.

At Strathcona Park Lodge, park employees were holding a meeting when the quake struck.

"It was a pretty horrendous experience," said Jim Boulding, an outdoor education director.

"The whole building started to shake. Somebody yelled, 'Hey, we're having an earthquake,' and there was no doubt about it."

"The centre of this quake was definitely in the park, to the west of the lodge," Boulding said.

There were a dozen park employees in the park at the time of the quake, along with about 50 Unitarians on an outdoor education course.

Boulding said he imagined this quake was much like one in the 40s when a ridge was knocked off Colonel Foster mountain.

At that time, debris plugged Landslide Lake, Boulding said. When the plug later broke, the flood washed away trees and left mounds of debris below the lake.

Papers faulted on cancer data

By MIKE HUGHES

Newspapers have to shoulder some of the blame for a lot of misinformation about cancer and things that cause the killer disease, says Dr. Peter Coy, director of the Victoria Cancer Clinic.

Stories lacking background or detailed information often lead to widespread erroneous theories about the relationship between certain agents or products and cancer, he said in an interview.

He mentions food additives as an example.

They are generally thought to be unhealthy and one of the regressive things food companies have inflicted on consumers.

However, medical researchers now feel that food additives, because of their preservative qualities, are one of the factors leading to a drop in the number of stomach cancer cases in the western world, Coy says.

He says experts feel one of the things that caused stomach cancer was the fermentation process that was taking place in the food.

But now, with freezers and refrigerators, as well as the use of preservatives, the fermentation process is stalled.

"This is a good example of how people misunderstand something as being dangerous when, in fact, it is quite helpful," Coy says.

These and other misunderstandings will be dealt with March 18 at 8 p.m. in the Newcombe Auditorium at a public forum sponsored by the Times and the Victoria branch of the Canadian Cancer Society.

"One of the things we hope to do is settle some of the anxiety people have about cancer and the way in which certain aspects of the environment are thought to be responsible," Coy said.

COY
. . . forum chairman

He will be chairman of the forum and will be speaking on radiation and cancer.

Also on the panel will be Dr. Peter Dunn, specialist in biochemistry and a researcher at the University of B.C.'s department of medical genetics.

He will start off the forum with a talk on epidemiology, the study of the distribution of diseases in a group of people.

Dunn will also discuss methods to test new chemicals to see if they are carcinogenic or cancer causing.

Dr. Edwin Henry, occupational health physician for the provincial health ministry, will talk on dangers in the workplace using asbestos as an example.

Dr. Malcolm Brigden, a specialist in hematology on staff at the Victoria Cancer Clinic, will focus on smoking and lung cancer.

There will be a question period following the speakers and then a slide/tape presentation illustrating what happens when a person comes to the cancer clinic. A second question period will follow.

Outlining his own presentation, Dr. Coy said one of the major misunderstandings about the effects of radiation centres around the question of x-rays.

People have heard that chest x-rays or dental x-rays can be harmful and therefore they are refusing to have them, Coy says.

What is often lacking is an understanding of the degree of risk present in these x-rays, he says. People need more facts before making a decision not to do something which could be beneficial for them in the long run.

"We have to balance the risk of having the x-ray with the knowledge the x-ray can give."

Society should be aware of the potential hazards of radiation in order to be able to knowledgeably monitor those who are handling equipment such as x-ray machines, Coy says.

In the last 10 years, cancer specialists have discovered a lot of things in the environment which cause cancer. The difficulty is knowing what to do with that information.

"We can't throw the baby out with the bathwater.

"You have to balance the harm these things can do with the good they bring to society."

He uses the example of a skill saw.

"How many people have cut off their fingers with skill saws?

"But we don't, for that reason, ban skill saws because they can be useful."
